PREFACE

The present volume of the Illinois historical collections owes its existence to the recognition by the trustees of the Illinois State Historical Library that their task of setting forth the sources for the history of the state would be left uncompleted without a detailed account of the materials of interest to the social scientist to be found in the various county courthouses. The trustees wished also to determine, during the preparation of such an account, if the conditions surrounding the county records are such as will insure their preservation. Having thus stated in a word the purpose of this volume, I will refer the reader to the introduction for a fuller discussion, and will reserve the remainder of my preface to such allusions and explanations of a personal nature as would be out of place in the body of a volume necessarily so impersonal as this.

The primary material upon which this book is based was obtained in a survey of the county records of the state begun for the Illinois State Historical Library by Mr. Clarence D. Johns in the fall of 1911. In the course of a year he made observations and lists of the records in sixty-seven counties. Beginning in June of 1912 Mr. John P. Senning examined the records of Livingston, Pike, Brown, Whiteside, Christian, McDonough, Morgan, Macoupin, Woodford, Wayne, Effingham, Clay, Shelby, Montgomery, Mason, Menard, Cass, Scott, Mercer, Rock Island, Stark, Henry, Lee, Fulton, and Schuyler. The first eight named were partially rechecked by Mr. Jacob A. Hofto of the Illinois historical survey of the University of Illinois in April and June of 1915, and certain apparent discrepancies in the last fifteen were similarly rechecked by me in a hasty manner in April of 1914. The records in Calhoun, Coles, Cook, Cumberland, Douglas, Henderson, Marshall, Moultrie, Putnam, and Vermilion, completing the one hundred and two counties of the state, were examined by me in February, March, and April of 1914. The introductions to the report are based partly on a study of the session laws of the state, partly on conclusions drawn from my personal observations in the counties visited, and from the notes of the other persons engaged in the survey.

In preparing for publication a book based so largely on the work of others I have sometimes felt that my duty was in a great measure editorial, and the feeling has brought with it a sense of limitation. In the majority of instances I have been obliged to employ the notes of other men to arrive at a conception of the variations in the types and titles of records—variations so marked that it is impossible to describe the records of any two counties of the state in the same terms. And no matter how painstaking the searchers, errors in gathering such material will occur. No historical student needs to be told that absolute accuracy is the fruit not of the first nor of the second collation; yet in no instance have two thorough examinations of the same county been possible. Ordinarily I have been obliged to content myself with careful editing of the notes at hand. Minor discrepancies apparent on the face of the notes have been eliminated; more important ones in certain instances indicated above have been checked back to the records. In the main the material as it now stands appears to me to be trustworthy and accurate.

The material presented for the various counties in the body of the report is not always uniform in scope. As to the variations mentioned above, in certain cases a standard designation for a record has been adopted; in other cases too great intricacy and variability made it necessary to let the local terminology stand. Different counties, also, have been listed with different degrees of minuteness. In each case all the material available after being reduced to a standard order has been printed. The shorter lists I believe include all the more important records, and the longer and more minute ones—among them Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Moultrie, Sangamon, and Vermilion—exhibit in detail the actual conditions and incidentally the difficulty of the problem of selection with which the surveyors were confronted.

The trained archivist may ask why the experience of European archivists has not been more fully utilized in the introductions. My answer, if heretical, is short. I was unable to find any point except the use of permanent record materials at which the experience or conclusions of European archivists touched the conditions or problems of the local records of a middle-western state. While fully recognizing the importance of the problems involved and the danger of attempting their solution empirically, I think that the proper scientific principles must be evolved from an intensive study of the local situation.

To the casual reader these pages in many places may appear keenly critical of local record officers. Such, however, is not the writer's intention. In many instances the faults and mistakes in record making were committed a generation ago; in many others the poor condition of the records is due to overcautious frugality in the administration of county finances. In the remaining cases, in which a negligent custodian in the present is apparently blameworthy, the people of Illinois must not forget that the negligence is partly their own. We have all to reproach ourselves with paying too little heed to the condition of record rooms whose contents are a vital concern to each one of us; and better conditions will not become universal until public opinion becomes sufficiently aroused to demand them. In the following pages, therefore, no criticisms of particular custodians are made. On the other hand mention is made of such offices as appeared to be in excellent condition. The author has, however, found it necessary to judge of these in great part from the notes of other investigators and doubtless has left unmentioned offices as meritorious as any that have been particularly noticed.

I have left to the last the pleasant duty of acknowledging my indebtedness to the assistance of others. As early as 1906 Mr. Alvord, recognizing the importance of the county records of the state, attempted by means of a questionnaire addressed to county officers to reach some conclusion as to their extent. Mr. S. J. Buck, now of the University of Minnesota and formerly of the University of Illinois, some five years ago made a preliminary examination of the records of eighteen of the oldest counties. Coming down to those who have directly contributed to the success of the present survey I have to express my personal indebtedness for the clearness and reliability of the notes left me by Mr. Johns. The county officials of the state without exception have welcomed the employees of the library and have been ready with any assistance in their power. This is true especially of Cook county; there the extent and intricacy of the records made it necessary to appeal constantly to officials and deputies for assistance and explanations, and the appeal was never made in vain. Furthermore various Cook county officials have been kind enough to read and criticize the proof of those portions of the report relating to their offices. Mr. A. F. Terrell, county clerk of Mason county, has criticized in proof parts IV and V of the introduction; and Mr. Eugene Whiting, clerk of the circuit court and recorder of Fulton county, has similarly criticized parts II and III; both men have offered helpful suggestions. Mr. Whiting especially has given me careful criticism by which I have greatly profited. The chairman of the library board, Mr. E. B. Greene, and the editor of the Collections, Mr. C. W. Alvord, have continually assisted with helpful advice and have afforded me every possible facility for the preparation of the volume. In particular I have to thank Mr. Alvord for careful criticism of the literary form of the introductions and of the composition of the volume in general. Miss Mary G. Doherty of the library staff has been of great service in collating the material, and indeed has exercised a valuable supervision over every detail in seeing the book through the press. Miss Lydia M. Brauer has assisted in reading the proofs.

The introduction to this volume has been carefully indexed: and it is believed that the character of obscure titles in the county lists can ordinarily be determined by checking their key words through the index to the general description of records of their type. In the lists of county records the word "date" when used to indicate the termination of a record series means the date at which the county was examined, which is indicated in a footnote attached to the name of the county. The counties are arranged alphabetically except that Cook on account of its size is placed first. The record offices are arranged in the following order: county clerk, probate clerk, circuit clerk, and recorder. The records of each of these offices are arranged in the order indicated by the following outline:[1]

County Clerk
    County Commissioners' and Supervisors' Records
    County Court Records
        Common Law and Criminal Records

HISTORY OF COUNTY ARCHIVES IN ILLINOIS

I. The County Archives of Illinois[1]

The following introduction states certain conclusions based on a survey of the record offices—those of the circuit, county, and probate clerks, and recorder[2]—in each of the hundred and two counties of Illinois. The evidence from which the conclusions are drawn appears in the later parts of this volume, which contain respectively an account of the general character of Illinois county records, and detailed lists of the volumes and papers in each office. In the examination of the various counties, two ends were constantly kept in view: the first was to appraise the historical value of the records and to list their contents for the benefit of the searcher; the second was to determine whether the records of the past were adequately protected from damp, decay, and fire, and whether the records of the present are made by methods which insure economy of space and permanence. In a word the purpose of the survey was to test the form and condition of the records themselves by the principles of archive science, and to establish the degree of interest of their contents.

Before estimating the importance of county records for historical purposes, it will be well to indicate briefly

[1] Pages xvii–xlv of this volume have already been printed separately as a report for the general assembly.

[2] The offices of circuit clerk and recorder of course are held by the same persons in all but a dozen counties; the same is true of the offices of county clerk and probate clerk. In Cook county the records of the superior, criminal, and juvenile courts, the board of assessors, and the board of review were examined in addition to those above mentioned.

the types of records kept in the various offices. The circuit clerk has the records of the circuit court, including common law, chancery, and criminal business, and proceedings in naturalization. These records may be classified as files of case papers—including the documents filed in each case—court records proper, court dockets, judgment and execution dockets, fee books, transcript records, and bond records. The recorder's office contains records of real estate transfers, mortgages, and leases affecting land in the county and filed for record, as well as records of various certificates—incorporation, election of trustees, etc. The probate clerk's office contains records of the execution of wills and the administration of estates, including records of wills, of the appointment of administrators, executors, conservators, and guardians, of their official letters empowering them to act, of their bonds for the faithful discharge of their trusts, of their financial reports and settlements. Further the office has records of inventories, appraisements and sale bills of the real and personal property of estates, and various records of similar nature; as in the case of the circuit clerk's office it has also a file of papers paralleling the records. In one form or another the majority of the records of these three offices may be traced back in each county to its organization.

A part of the county clerk's records are of more recent date. First is a series of records of the county court similar in general to those of the circuit court, but including also records of the proceedings of county judges in special assessments, in the establishment of drainage districts, in the disposition of dependent and delinquent children, in adoptions, and in insanity proceedings. With the exception of the insanity record, these records all begin with 1872 and later dates.

The records of the county court, however, are only a part of the county clerk's records. Since the foundation of each county, its clerk has kept a record of marriages, and since 1877, records of births and deaths. He is also custodian of the tax records of the county past and present, including certificates of levy, road tax lists, schedules, assessors' and collectors' books, judgment sale and redemption records, etc. He always has an old record of marks and brands, and one of estrays or stray cattle—frequently also a file of old election returns. Moreover he is keeper of the records of the county commissioners or supervisors, which ordinarily go back to the formation of the county, and contain in recent years the record of county government and county finances, and for the earlier period a variety of matters, such as licenses, petitions for new roads, surveys, etc.[1]

A few counties have records antedating the formation of the state. In most cases these are merely the beginnings of the circuit clerks', recorders', probate, and county commissioners' records mentioned above. In Randolph and St. Clair counties, however, there are records of French dominion in the state, which reveal the forms of government and public business of a civilization that disappeared in Illinois a century or more ago.

Aside from the self-evident case of the archives of French, revolutionary, and territorial Illinois, one aspect of the historical value of the county records suggests itself at once. A body of marriage records, court records, deed records, and county board records inevitably contains a vast number of authentic facts regarding persons and events, any one of which may prove to be extremely important. Thus a single entry in a public office may preserve to a historical student the truth that may lead to a far-reaching conclusion or overset the credibility of a plausible contemporary narrative. What particular book or file may do so, no one can say till he searches the extant material with a definite problem in mind. There are not many sections of the county records that can summarily be dismissed as devoid of all interest to the sociologist, the economist, or the historian.

The bulk of the Illinois county records partly conceals their supreme importance—the fact that they represent in great measure that aspect of the state's history which today seems best worth the writing. The historian of Illinois can no longer be content with chronicling the acts and the succession of her governors and legislatures, and her votes for Whig, Democratic, or Republican congressmen, senators and presidents. He cannot even be content with tracing in microscopic detail the lives of her great citizens. Rather, if he expects the world to approve his work as worth the doing, he must set himself to the task of showing how the Illinois of the present has come into being. He must explain how on the foundation of a French empire in the Mississippi valley has been built an Anglo-Saxon commonwealth—how men entered the wilderness, bought and sold land, dabbled with the slavery they had put from them in their constitution as a forbidden thing, acquired wealth and achieved comfort and luxury, built roads and established schools, and administered a rude justice and a simple government. In the land records, county commissioners' records, and circuit court records, in the assessors' books, the probate wills and inventories, the election returns, and the slavery papers that survive in county courthouses is the extant material for such a history of Illinois.

Much of the necessary sources for such a history must, it is true, be sought elsewhere. The relative value of the county records of course declines as the life of the counties they serve expands and merges more and more in the larger and more complex life of the state and the nation. The archives will tell us little of the coming of the railroads and of the development of the industrial life of the state. Even for the earlier Illinois they can tell us only by inference of ideals and aspirations and spiritual life. But at all events, if we care to listen to them they can tell us as much of the physical conquest of the Illinois wilderness as we can understand.

The records that hold such material, apart from any pecuniary interests they may serve, are priceless; if they are lost they can never be replaced. Affecting to ignore their fate by dismissing them as mere playthings for scholastic pedants is impossible. They are not simply material for history; they are the very incarnation of the state's past. Only when the people of Illinois are content to live wholly in the present and ignore the past, may they logically permit their county records through the negligence of county officials to perish in whole or in part; when they do so, they will estimate their records at a lower rate than that at which similar records are appraised by the enlightened opinion of the civilized world.

In European countries of late years, notably in Belgium, an awakened national spirit has led directly to a new appreciation of the value of public records and the care to which they are entitled. This new spirit has found practical expression in a science of archive economy. With a view to the permanence of the records of the future, followers of the science have searched for the qualities of ink and paper and the methods of filing that insure the permanence of the records intrusted to them. For the preservation of the records of the past they have considered fireproof receptacles and storing devices, and methods of restoring and mounting decaying papers. In a word, the end of archival science is to preserve the past and present records of every jurisdiction as public documents, and to render them available to the searcher.

In this country effective application of archive methods to the records of local jurisdiction has so far been confined to New England. In 1884 the legislature of Massachusetts provided for a general survey of the records in her local jurisdiction. This survey, begun under the direction of Carroll D. Wright,[1] led to the appointment of a commissioner of public records with general supervision over the records of the counties and towns. First Rhode Island (1896) and then Connecticut (1899)[2] followed the example of Massachusetts. The reports of the commissioners of these three states contain the best body of local archive practice to be found in the United States.

The most valuable work has been done by the late

Robert W. Swan, commissioner for Massachusetts. For more than a quarter of a century he labored patiently and ceaselessly to recover lost records, to restore defaced record books, to drive clerks to care for their records, and selectmen to provide fireproof repositories for them, and most of all to introduce better systems of record keeping for the future. To the student of archive economy, the long series of his reports is a mine of suggestion and information.

However, it is impossible to adapt the conclusions of New England or European archivists to Illinois conditions without change. The experience of archivists in other countries must of course be studied, but the problems that present themselves in this state must be formulated and solved independently. The problems presented by Illinois county records have seemed to group themselves under the following heads: First the question of ink and paper used; second that of possible economies in the use of record space; third that of protecting the records against loss or decay and rendering them available to students and searchers; and lastly, as a possible means to this end, the question of the advisability of centralization of county records in a central archive depot. On some of the heads the experience of other states will be of value to us; on others it will be necessary to feel our way.[1]

[1] In many respects conditions surrounding local records in New England are different from those in Illinois. Record jurisdictions are far more numerous. Carroll D. Wright's first report enumerated 348 towns, 14 counties, and 20 districts for registering of deeds for a population (1910) of 3,366,416. Connecticut with 1,114,756 population has record offices in 8 counties, 119 probate districts, and 179 towns. (Report of temporary examiner of public records [Connecticut], 1904.) Rhode Island has 5 counties, and 39 towns and cities with offices to serve a population of less than one-tenth that of Illinois—542,610 as against 5,638,591. (Report of state record commissioner [Rhode Island], 1910.) This multiplicity of record jurisdictions was made worse by the practice of electing town clerks annually and compensating them

The question of inks and papers for record use has already been carefully considered in Massachusetts The indefatigable Swan early came to the conclusion that the records of the immediate past would in time be completely obliterated as a result of the unfit materials used in making them. To guard future records from a similar fate he suggested that the state enforce the use of standard inks and papers. After a series of tests, both by chemical analysis and actual use he fixed on the formula of an ink which he considered permanent, and secured legislation requiring local offices of record to procure it through the record commissioner.[1] Swan believed that an ink originally writing black, any colored ink, or any ink made with aniline or eosin, was certain to fade. For the same reason, while advocating the use of black record typewriter ribbons and stamping pads, he condemned ribbons and pads made with colored ink. As for paper, he finally decided that both wood-pulp and all-linen papers were not permanent, and recommended a paper of linen rags and cotton clippings.[2]

only by fees. As a result, the clerks pursued other businesses and the records were moved from place to place accordingly. Further, the fact that many records dated to the mid-seventeenth century made the task of restoring them a difficult one. To copy such records required the services of a skilled copyist familiar with the handwriting and the phonetic spelling that were capable of making "Winsenite" out of "Wednesday night" and "hole of the rats" from "whole of the rates." Swan finally came to the conclusion that it was less expensive to mount such records page by page on transparent silk by the Emery process. In the great majority of Illinois records, on the contrary, the spelling is fair and the handwriting irreproachable. In almost no case is a record in such shape that more is needed to restore it than the attention of a skilled binder. In the case of the almost single exception of the old French records, the papers requiring attention have been admirably mounted under the direction of Mr. C. W. Alvord.

In the course of the present survey, it has been possible to handle this question only in a superficial manner. In general, it may be said that only records of the period, 1850–1860, show any marked tendency to fade; and—if the evidence of numbers of private acts of the period providing for the copying of defaced rec-

"Specifications for a Standard Record Ink, to be furnished under Chapter 354 of the Acts of 1899.

"It must be a gallo-tannate of iron ink, not inferior in any essential quality to one properly prepared after the following formula, in which all the ingredients are of that quality prescribed by the United States Pharmacopœia, and the per cent. of true acid present in the sample of tannic acid used has been determined by the Loewenthal and Schroeder method.

"Take of pure, dry Tannic Acid, 23.4 parts by weight. of crystal Gallic Acid, 7.7 parts. of Ferrous Sulphate, 30.0 parts. of Gum Arabic, 10.0 parts. of diluted Hydrochloric Acid, 25.0 parts. of Carbolic Acid, 1.0 part. of Water, sufficient to make up the mixture at the temperature of 60° F. to the volume of 1,000 parts by weight of water.

"Inks submitted will be subjected to the following tests, as compared with the standard ink described above:

1. A fluid ounce allowed to stand at rest in a white glass vessel, freely exposed in diffused daylight for two weeks to the light and air, at a temperature of 50° to 60° F., protected against the entrance of dust, must remain as free from deposit upon the surface of the ink or on the bottom or sides of the vessel.

2. It must contain no less iron, and must have a specific gravity of 1.035 to 1.040 at 60° F.

3. It must develop its color as quickly.

4. After a week's exposure to diffused daylight the color must be as intense a black when used upon the standard record paper, and it must equally resist changes from exposure to light, air, water, or alcohol.

5. It must be as fluid, flow as well, strike no more through the paper, nor remain more sticky immediately after drying." Report of the public record commissioner (Massachusetts), 1901, p. 23.

With the additional requirements that the ink must resist changes from bleaching agents, and must contain a temporary blue coloring material, these specifications are identical with those of the United States government. Swan considered an ink of iron or nut galls—or gallo-tannate of iron—the one best able to resist fading, washing, or erasure. A carbon ink such as india ink he thought retained its color best—but he considered that the insolubility of carbon exposed a carbon ink like india to the danger of being washed off the paper. He believed, also, that to be permanent, ink must soak into the paper. Accordingly he considered blotting a written page and using an erasing fluid both dangerous practices—for the one left little ink to penetrate the paper, and the other might cause unforeseen chemical reactions in the ink. He considered a black record typewriter ribbon made the most permanent record possible, for it made possible the use of a carbon compound which was driven into the paper by the type.

ords is worth anything—the records began to fade soon after they were made. The paper now employed in most offices seems of good quality; though what change the passage of a century or two may work on both ink and paper is another question. In most counties the typewriter ribbons used appear in a list approved by the Massachusetts commissioners. The inks ordinarily procured are Carter's, Stafford's, and Arnold's. In most cases they purport to be made for record purposes, but it is impossible to say on a superficial examination whether or not they are permanent. Swan's tests of various brands cannot be relied on at present. His list of approved inks was published twenty years ago; and since that time both the names and compositions of inks have undergone marked changes. Without chemical analysis or practical tests it is impossible to say whether an ink is or is not permanent; and such tests have necessarily been precluded by the scope of this survey.

The matter of inks and paper however, is altogether too important to be trusted to chance. In some way or other the state should assure itself at once of the quality of materials used on its county records. Two courses suggest themselves; either the appointment of a special commission to put the whole question to the test of chemical analysis, or the passage of an act requiring the county officers to use only inks and papers guaranteed by the dealers to conform to the Massachusetts standards. The latter course is the simpler and would certainly obviate much of the danger now present.

Little attention so far has been paid by archivists in the United States to economies of record space. The importance of the topic, however, is brought home to any thoughtful observer by conditions in certain Illinois courthouses. Their small vaults are loaded with half-used and abandoned volumes, which have crowded other records out into storeroom or basement to run their chance of destruction. As a rule this is due to the purchase of books with printed pages which did not fit the document brought for record, and either had to be discarded altogether or else were made to answer the purpose by wasting one page out of every two. Often, too, a clerk has attempted to use a printed form for a type of record totally unfitted for it. To avoid wasting space in such ways would be to economize both in money and vault room.[1]

Speaking generally, the most economical record book is one containing a printed form, drawn to correspond with the forms on which documents usually come to the office to be recorded. Next in order of economy is a typewritten book, and last a handwritten one. The usual practice at present is to use books containing printed forms side by side with blank record volumes filled out either on the book typewriter or, in the case of loose-leaf records, on ordinary machines. As a general rule some such combination appears to be most economical.

The following detailed conclusions in regard to economy are based on evidence in great part printed elsewhere.[2] In the case of the circuit clerk, printed-form records for entry of judgment by default and by confession can probably be kept to good advantage in all but the smallest counties. On the other hand, printed-form chancery records for divorce or foreclosure suits can be kept only in the largest.[1] Both more convenient and more economical than the old term dockets are the loose-leaf dockets, in which one leaf is assigned each case, and carried in a current binder for successive entries at different terms till the case is finally adjudicated. Fee books, in the circuit and other county courts, should be almost entirely manuscript. A full-page, printed-form fee book is more uniformly wasteful than any other type of record.

[1] It seems desirable to remove from abandoned records what pages have been used and to bind them together. In this manner much of the effect of former waste can be obviated.

[2] In the succeeding paragraphs and indeed in this whole introduction, very little that is said is applicable to Cook county. Methods there in use will be indicated in connection with the detailed list of records for the county.

In recorders' offices, waste of space has most usually arisen from the use of printed-form blanks made to fit the elaborate mortgage forms devised by various farm loan companies. Because one of these companies has changed its form or discontinued business in a locality, whole books have been discarded unused, in one county or a dozen. The best remedy is care on the part of the clerk to order his printed books so that the forms do not outrun his immediate needs. In this connection, it is an excellent scheme to have the forms of five or six different companies bound in the same book with standard mortgage forms, or with a blank section in which special instruments may be recorded.

Further, most recorders' offices would probably find it good practice to separate chattel mortgage records completely from ordinary land records. A chattel mortgage in three or in four years loses validity, and the record of it is of no further importance. It should not therefore be treated in the same manner as a deed or mortgage that forms a link in a chain of title to real estate, and is therefore a permanent record. Accordingly chattels should be recorded in a separate volume, numbered in a separate series, entered in a separate entry book, and indexed in a separate index.

[1] In the smaller counties if no question of legality were involved, a loose-leaf chancery record for partitions or decrees would prove more convenient by permitting the records of the various proceedings in a suit to be kept in one place. In the opinion of the attorney general, a loose-leaf record is not a well-bound volume in the meaning of the law. See appendix, post, xliii.

In county and probate clerks' offices it is poor policy to carry in the same volume the record of an insanity trial and of the appointment of a conservator. The first of these is a county court and the second a probate court record; and if the county ever attains the population requisite for a separate probate clerk's office, not even the wisdom of Solomon can assign each office the records that are its due. The recording of executors' bonds and letters on a printed form that includes also a blank space to enter the will is frequently wasteful. The same is true of other records that combine formal headings with manuscript lists, such as sale bills of personal property. One excellent way of combining a record or list of variable content and extent with a fixed form heading is to use a blank page, and to stamp in the formal heading with a rubber stamp. For recording the various documents filed in the probate of estates, certain offices have devised a loose-leaf form, and, waiving the question of legality, the device appears excellent for a small county.

Marriage records as usually made are more vulnerable to criticism than any others kept by the county clerk. A few offices keep both the board of health form of marriage register and a record of license and certificate also, perhaps in the belief that the former record does not satisfy the legal requirement that the certificate be recorded. Other officers, possibly under the impression that the form prescribed by the board of health is no longer required by law, have discontinued it altogether. Either practice is open to criticism, for the board of health form is probably a sufficient record of the certificate and should, for the sake of uniformity, be the one record kept.[1] The custom of using books of applications for marriage licenses, with printed questions and blank spaces for the applicant's answer is wasteful; he should be required to sign a printed affidavit in a bound book.

Finally, economy of space would be effected in the offices of the county clerk and recorder if the state government issued small form books to be used in recording certificates. Physicians' and midwives' certificates, dentists' certificates, architects' certificates, veterinary surgeons' certificates, nurses' certificates, certificates of breeding of stallions have all to be recorded in county offices, and are on forms prescribed by the state departments. Usually a county has need of only a small book for any one of these, but almost invariably, probably because it is comparatively cheaper to procure a large printed book from a private firm, it procures a volume that it can never hope to fill before the law or the prescribed form is changed. The remedy suggested above, when applied by the naturalization bureau at Washington, changed the naturalization records from the most wasteful to the most economical records kept by Illinois courts. If the state departments would adopt the same practice, and when issuing a new form of certificate would supply the smaller counties with books of twenty-five or fifty pages each, possible waste of space could easily be forestalled.

Economy in record keeping as we have seen is merely a corollary to the more important consideration of safety. The topic of safety naturally leads to the consideration of fireproof housing of records, in vaults or in fireproof courthouses. The great majority of Illinois counties make some pretensions to having the one or the other of these. Usually they adopt one of three different architectural schemes. A few counties house their clerks in a small, one-story, brick office set apart from the other county buildings. Others simply have their records shelved in the clerks' offices in the main courthouse—though usually where this is done the courthouse is supposedly fireproof. In the majority of cases, however, the county keeps its more valuable records in the courthouse vaults. The vaults are sometimes what the name implies and sometimes large rooms distinguished from others as to external appearance by steel doors, steel window shutters, and thick walls. In most counties the equipment consists in part at least of steel filingboxes and steel roller shelves, but in most counties also a part of the records are in old style, pasteboard boxes and wooden, upright shelves. So far the description will fit the majority of Illinois courthouses.

Perhaps the degree of safety enjoyed by county records can be most sharply indicated by something like a statistical summary. Fairly exact notes on ninety-five courthouses are at hand. Of these courthouses, forty-one are apparently fireproof, ten are doubtful, and forty-four, reckoning the counties without courthouses, make no pretense of being fireproof. Of these last, however, twenty-five have vaults that are clearly safe, although in half of these a part of the records are stored outside the vaults.[1] Of the ten courthouses classified as doubtful, five, and of the forty-four that are not fireproof, fourteen are without safe vaults. Therefore in nearly one-fifth of the counties of Illinois, the records are in immediate danger of wholesale destruction by fire.

Startling as the above statement may sound, to anyone acquainted with actual conditions in certain courthouses it is the barest commonplace. It is true that one often finds, in small counties as well as large, modern courthouses with good and adequate vaults, modern filing material, and carefully preserved records. It is also true that in others, constituting perhaps a bare majority, conditions are merely indifferent. But in a large minority of instances, there is no pretense of guarding the records from fire in the so-called "vaults." Kerosene lamps and coal stoves stand among wooden furniture on wooden floors, while the books and papers are in filing equipment of pasteboard and wood that could only furnish fuel to a fire. Apparently the county officials who tolerate such conditions cannot learn from the fires that have partially or completely destroyed the records of thirteen counties,[2] even though their own courthouses have been the scenes of such disasters. In at least two counties whose records have been wiped out by fire within the memory of men now in the prime of life, conditions are as bad as can be. True, these counties may have laid to their souls the proverb that it is useless to lock the stable door after the horse is stolen, for they have little left that the historical student would miss. But in at least five of the nineteen counties established prior to 1819, bodies of records that are practically intact escape from day to day by mere luck the complete destruction that could be wrought by a single misplaced match.

[1] In addition, five have good vaults with wooden equipment, and two others good vaults that are too small. The description given above is based merely on general observations and by no means on technical examinations. However, it errs on the side of leniency if at all.

[2] As follows: Jackson in 1843; Franklin in 1845; Wabash, April 5, 1857; Logan, April 15, 1857; Pulaski, 1860; Moultrie, 1865; Iroquois, October, 1866; Cook, October 9, 1871; Hardin, 1884; Cumberland, 1885; Wayne, November, 1886; McLean, 1900; Clark, December 30, 1902. This list does not include certain instances in which the courthouses were burned without loss of records, or only minor damage was done.

In such a condition of affairs the duty of the legislature should be clear. So long as the constitution of the state exemplifies the policy of making and keeping records in the hundred and two county seats, the statute law should command that each of the hundred and two have a fireproof courthouse. Such a requirement need not bear too heavily on any county. It is not always the smallest counties that are the worst offenders. Further, the installing of fireproof vaults in an old courthouse should not prove too difficult or expensive. If that should seem impractical in any county, a separate building large enough to hold the record offices could be erected at moderate expense; and if located in a public square at some distance from other buildings it should afford a reasonable degree of protection against fire. Such a building at least would be a vast improvement in point of safety over many courthouses that could be named. But whatever the expense of safely housing a county's records may be, the statute law of the state should no longer leave the matter of safety to the option of county officials.[1]

[1] There is no statutory provision requiring counties to provide fireproof housing for their records. Various acts from an early date, however, have recognized the importance of such protection. Thus in 1837 an act directed

Metallic filing equipment is only one degree less necessary than fireproof vaults. The fact that paper and wood filing materials add to the danger of fire is the chief, but not the only reason for discarding them. If books are kept in an upright position, as is usually the case where wooden shelving is used, the weight of the book strains the binding of the back, and the top collects a layer of dust which gradually seeps down to deface and decay the leaves. For this second reason it is even worse to leave papers exposed to dust in open wooden pigeonholes.

However, it must always be borne in mind that fireproof vaults and modern filingboxes, unless supplemented by the care and interest of the individual custodians, will not save the records of Illinois. Statutes may prescribe receptacles that will protect the records from fire, but the most carefully drawn statutes cannot force negligent clerks to protect them from dust and decay. Here the one hope is to inspire every custodian with a sense of the importance of the records intrusted to him and of the care they deserve.

The explanation of the neglect from which older records suffer in many courthouses is to be sought in the distinction between current and dead records. To a greater or less extent the distinction can be traced in each of the record offices; but perhaps it is most noticeable in the county clerk's. Such of his records as appear to him important or likely to be consulted the building of a fireproof clerk's and recorder's office in Sangamon county. (1 Laws of 1837, p. 180.) In 1843, a general act authorized county commissioners to erect fireproof recorders' offices and permitted similar offices to be provided for the clerks. (Laws of 1843, p. 210.) But the act merely permitted and did not compel, and so the law stands today, requiring the erection of fireproof offices and vaults only when the finances of the county will permit. Revised statutes, 1913, ch. 34, sec. 26.

often in the course of business are carefully arranged in his vault. As examples, may be cited the county commissioners' and supervisors' records, birth, marriage, and death records, tax judgment records, recent collectors' books, and county court records, together with current dockets and fee books. But old county commissioners' papers, old assessors' and collectors' books, tax levies, road tax lists, and election returns, to mention only a few items, are apt, if the vault is at all crowded, to find their way to some other storage place.

In itself this is not censurable. It is perfectly natural that records ordinarily used in the daily round of business, and apt to be consulted by persons whose interest is pecuniary or personal, should be kept close to the office, and older records stored elsewhere. When, as in a few counties, such obsolete records are carefully filed, labeled, and arranged in adequate storage vaults, no more can be asked. Even when a room in attic or basement is carefully fitted up to receive dead records, the condition is so much above the average that it is difficult to find other words than commendations.

But in very many counties no such care is taken of old records. They are heaped on floors, in damp and dusty rooms that have not been cleaned in decades. Files are allowed to escape from broken pasteboard boxes and scatter over the floor. Papers sometimes are piled in open wooden boxes. Indeed words cannot picture conditions in the attic and basement storerooms of a few counties. To the knowledge of the present writer it is sometimes literally true that clerks do not know of the existence of records in such storerooms or of the plight they are in.

In too many cases such repositories have been got rid of by the simple process of destroying the books and papers they contain. Such action, reprehensible as it is, is at least more logical than preserving in a dust hole books and papers as public records. But if more logical, it is also more provoking, for in this manner records of importance have been put beyond the possibility of restoration. Undoubtedly the destruction of worthless books and papers is advisable, but the inability of certain clerks to distinguish between the worthy and the worthless has been responsible for the disappearance of too many valuable papers in smoke. The ideal condition would be one in which clerks were prohibited from destroying old papers until an agent of the state historical library had given permission. Here, however, we come face to face with the problem of centralization.

The subject of centralization of records, perhaps the most important of all, has been reserved to the last. In the following discussion it will be assumed that the keeping of certain records in county repositories is a settled policy in the state's political order, and is not to be reversed on considerations of archive management. In fact the proper departure for a discussion of centralizing county records is the fact mentioned above, that the records of an office divide themselves into records necessary for the dispatch of public business and records possessing historical value only. No one would consider seriously the withdrawal from its present lodgment of any record having a present use. Suggestions for centralization concern only records of the class last mentioned.

The experience of other states with the centralization of local records is of little service. As yet none of them has met the issue squarely. In recent years many states have passed laws for the removal of obsolete papers and records to central repositories; but none of these laws makes any pretense of designating certain classes of records for centralization and all of them require the assent of the county official concerned. Michigan, it is true, has just empowered its historical commission to take possession of all archives, state or local, over thirty years old, and in the commission's opinion no longer in current use. But such legislation only enables vigilant historical students to save valuable records from immediate danger of destruction. The problem of genuinely safeguarding the whole body of county records and making them as accessible to the historical student as to the lawyer demands a solution in broader terms.

At the outset one or two cautions may be stated. First, it is not desirable to remove all obsolete papers and records to a central depository. On a careful examination, certain types of books and files will be found to have no conceivable historical value; and these should be destroyed. Furthermore, as a general rule, it is poor policy to separate two records which are links in a connected chain of administrative or judicial procedure. To move court fee books, dockets, or case papers to a central repository, and leave the court records of the same period in a county seat is bad practice; for a person investigating a given case will discover that records affecting it which were made in one office have been divided between two. Another case in point would be separating assessors' and collectors' books from tax judgment records. As a general principle only bodies of records complete in themselves and possessing some historical interest are fit subjects for centralization.

A few such records may be mentioned. The clearest case perhaps is furnished by the files of election returns which in many counties are extant for years antedating the first constitution. These returns are of great historical interest, but are never referred to in ordinary business, and in too many instances have been destroyed by clerks who regarded them merely as rubbish. An act directing county clerks to surrender them to the state historical library on its request would probably encounter no disapproval whatever, and would render easily accessible to historical students a valuable body of material. It is, therefore, desirable that such an act be passed.

Certain other records also might at once be centralized to advantage. Most clerks would probably be willing to turn over their records and papers of cattle marks and brands, and of estrays; though in this case the historical interest of the material is less obvious. The earlier county commissioners' records and papers are of great historical importance; but very many clerks would be unwilling to part with them. These records therefore should be moved only in accord with a comprehensive project for centralization.

Such a project should be adopted only after careful consideration. It would necessitate a more thorough determination of the records that should be centralized than has here been possible. It would require a large building especially constructed for the storing of records and a corps of trained workers to collect, arrange, and care for the books and papers assembled in the central archive repository. The nucleus of the organization necessary could be found in the Illinois State Historical Library, which by means of appropriations could be expanded sufficiently to cope with the task. With these necessary preliminaries arranged, the state could evolve an ideal system of caring for records—a series of fireproof courthouses for county records in current use, a state officer whose consent would be necessary to the destruction of any record or paper by a county officer, and a central repository for records primarily of interest as monuments of the past of Illinois.

However, the question of removing election returns to the custody of the state historical library need not wait on the inception of such a scheme. A single trained assistant would suffice for collecting and arranging the county returns, and to set a clerk to work at such a scheme would not amount to accepting prematurely the principles of the broader scheme. It is, therefore, respectfully suggested that an act be passed empowering the state historical library to remove to Springfield all poll books, tally sheets, and duplicate election returns in county offices prior to 1870, and that further the librarian of the state historical library be empowered to certify to copies of them as fully as the former custodian might have done.

In closing, the earlier suggestions made in this report may be reiterated:

1. An act authorizing the centralization in the state historical library of all election returns prior to 1870 and making an appropriation for the purpose.

2. An act requiring the construction of fireproof vaults in all courthouses not clearly fireproof.

3. An act requiring the use of an ink and paper known to conform to the standards prescribed in Massachusetts.

4. An act requiring county clerks to keep the board of health marriage form record and explaining that a further record is unnecessary.

Lastly, the attention of county clerks is respectfully called to the conclusions offered above in regard to record keeping. As an epitome of the writer's observations made in a large number of Illinois counties they are worth consideration, if for no other reason.

LEGALITY OF LOOSE-LEAF RECORDS

416 Lincoln Hall,
Urbana, Illinois,
September 16, 1914.

The Honorable P. J. Lucey,
Attorney-General of Illinois,
Springfield, Illinois.

Dear Sir:

I am preparing a report to the General Assembly on the county records of Illinois for the Illinois State Historical Library. In this report, I intend to suggest certain modifications in present methods of record keeping and desire a legal opinion on the following points:

1. Is the "Board of Health form" marriage register usually kept, a sufficient register of marriage certificates to satisfy Chapter 89, section 11 of the 1913 Revised Statutes?

The Board of Health form includes besides the number and date of the license and various statistical information, the name of the bride and groom, the place and date of marriage, the witnesses, the name and office or position of the person certifying, the date of the return and the date it was registered.

2. Is a loose leaf record book a "well bound book" in the sense of Chapter 115, section 9, and Chapter 25, section 16 of the Revised Statutes? The type of loose-leaf book I have in mind can be opened with a key until completed and then is bound mechanically so that the only way of removing a leaf is to tear it out.

I shall be very grateful for an opinion on these two points, and trust that I have made them clear.

Very truly yours,
THEODORE C. PEASE
Inspector of County Archives

STATE OF ILLINOIS
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
SPRINGFIELD, September 19, 1914.

MR. THEODORE C. PEASE,
416 Lincoln Hall,
Urbana, Illinois.

DEAR SIR:

In your favor of the 16th instant, you desire to know in what form the registry of marriage certificates should be kept.

In reply thereto, I will say that any form which complies with the provisions of paragraph 11, chapter 89, Hurd's Revised Statutes, 1913, is sufficient. Said paragraph provides that the county clerk, upon receiving a marriage certificate from the official performing the marriage ceremony, shall make a registry thereof in a book kept for that purpose, which registry shall contain the Christian and surname of the parties to the marriage, the time of the marriage and the name of the person certifying the same. The county clerk shall also endorse upon such certificate presented to him the time when the same is registered and shall number and carefully preserve the same.

You further desire to know whether a loose leaf record book is a well bound book within the meaning of the several statutory provisions requiring records to be kept in a well bound book.

The expression "well bound books" or "a well bound book" frequently appears in the statutes where officers are required to keep records. Loose leaf records are an innovation which stenographers, typewriters, increased correspondence and the constantly increasing size of records have necessitated for the economical transaction of business. How far the term "well bound book" will give way to the use of loose leaf records can only be determined by the courts.

The records of instruments, in the office of the recorder of deeds and in the office of circuit clerk, are open to the inspection of the public. The original instruments are often lost or mislaid. The title to property, amounting in value to vast sums, is often dependent upon the records in these offices. Everything that will tend to the preservation of such records should be observed. While a loose leaf record may be a well bound book and may be locked so that the loose leaves cannot be removed, still the lock may be unlocked, or left unlocked, and leaves removed much easier than in a record wherein leaves are tightly bound.

I am therefore of the opinion that the recorder of deeds and the circuit clerk should record instruments in well bound books wherein the leaves are tightly bound and that the use of loose leaf records would not be a compliance with the law.

Very respectfully,

P. J. LUCEY,

Attorney General

563–B

As the foregoing opinion in so far as it relates to loose-leaf records is based on an interpretation of facts rather than of law, it may be permissible for a layman to suggest the arguments from fact on the other side.

First, it is clear that the one point of advantage in a bound volume over a loose-leaf is the impossibility of removing a leaf from the former without leaving traces of one's work. It is perfectly possible to cut or tear leaves from a bound folio; except in certain Chicago offices, and in a few small county offices where the clerk's desk is in plain view of his record shelves, I would undertake to do this to any record not in current use without being caught in the act. In case of such mutilation the courts in hearing pleas for the reinstatement of the record involved would probably admit as circumstantial evidence of its existence both entries relating to it in indexes or entry books, and the mutilated condition of the volume. Since a document recorded in a loose-leaf volume would be entered and indexed precisely as if in a bound book, the case against the loose-leaf reduces to this—that no trace of the mutilation would appear in the volume.

In abatement of this point it may be pleaded that loose-leaf books of the type usually employed for record purposes can be tampered with only while in process of formation. A loose-leaf volume while in process of formation can be opened for the insertion or removal of pages only with a key, and by the removal of a steel rod from the back when completed, may be as permanently fastened as an ordinary bound book. When a loose-leaf record is either locked or bound, a leaf can no more be torn from it without leaving a visible torn edge than from an ordinary book.

A few precautions may be suggested which in a small office would make the one book practically as safe as the other. First, the pages of a loose-leaf record should be numbered with a consecutive numbering stamp as fast as inserted. In case a document were fraudulently removed, the missing page number would thus betray its absence. Second, all loose-leaf records should be indexed as soon as made. Third, loose-leaf records should be fitted with high grade locks. Fourth, when still uncompleted, they should be carefully watched. If he observes these precautions, a clerk in a small office should think it no hardship to be held strictly accountable for pages lost from his loose-leaf volumes.

Exercise of the foregoing precautions should avert any danger arising from the use of a loose-leaf record, except the danger of foul play by a dishonest clerk or deputy; and a dishonest clerk or deputy can tamper as easily with a bound record as with a loose-leaf one. It is interesting to note that the willingness of a clerk to assume the responsibility entailed on him by a loose-leaf record is apt to vary inversely with the number of his assistants. The heads of departments in Cook county offices that employ two hundred clerks hold up their hands in horror at the very mention of a loose-leaf record; the clerk in the average large down-state office with five or six assistants is frankly skeptical; and the officer with two or three deputies is uncertain; while the competent recorder who, with a son or daughter to assist him, does all his own work, is usually frankly in favor of the device. Not only is it in the smallest counties, where the success of bound printed-form volumes is most problematical, that the loose-leaf record should be of the greatest service; it is in these counties that it can be used with safety.

II. Clerk of the Circuit Court

The first mention of circuit courts in legislation[1] affecting the present state of Illinois is in an act of the Northwest territory, adopted in 1795, which prescribed that the judges of the general court hold court in the various counties of the territory.[2] As a separate territory, Illinois imposed on the judges of its supreme court a similar duty, and since its admission to the union has grouped its counties into judicial circuits varying in number, and presided over at some periods by justices of the supreme court and at others by a distinct class of judges.[3] The latter practice has prevailed since 1848. In each county a clerk of the circuit court, at first appointed by the circuit judge, but since 1848 an elective officer, has custody of the records of the circuit court.[4]

[1] The following pages in no sense purport to be a history of local government in Illinois. They are merely designed to sketch such legislation as results in the accumulation of county records. Accordingly many important functions and duties of county officers will go unmentioned, simply because they do not produce records.

[2] Maxwell's code, p. 48. See also Laws adopted by the governor and judges of the Indiana territory, at their first sessions held at Saint Vincennes January 12th, 1801, p. 18. The general court of the Northwest territory held its terms in the various counties of the territory; but the word circuit was not used. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, from the commencement of the government to the 31st of December, 1791, pp. 15, 44.) The act of 1795 is the first to distinguish the terms held at the seat of the court from the terms in the counties.

[3] In 1835 the supreme judges were relieved from the circuit duty formerly assigned them. (Laws of 1835, p. 150.) But in 1841 a law designed to pack the supreme court for a political decision required the supreme judges to return to circuit duty, a lot from which they were relieved by the constitution of 1848. (Laws of 1841, p. 173.) Since that date the two orders of judges have been distinct.

[4] In 1788 a law of the Northwest territory established county courts of common pleas held by appointees of the governor. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, from the commencement of the government to the 31st of December, 1791, pp. 7 et seq.) In 1805 a court similarly named was given all the jurisdiction of the former courts of quarter sessions, orphans' court, and common pleas courts. (Laws passed at the first session of

Generally speaking the circuit court has unlimited primary jurisdiction in common law, chancery, and criminal cases, and also appellate jurisdiction in the case of appeals from justices of the peace.[1] By virtue of various acts it has from time to time enjoyed certain special jurisdictions. Thus an act of 1821 assigned it the duty of ordering sales of real estate in probate cases,[2] and another in 1839 that of giving judgment against real estate on which taxes were unpaid—a duty transferred to the county judge in 1849.[3] Further, a series of early acts required the circuit clerk to issue and register Negro certificates of freedom; and federal statutes in addition have assigned the court jurisdiction in the naturalization of aliens. In spite of these exceptions, however, the great mass of the court's records are the result of ordinary litigation.[4]

The supreme court, sitting in the various counties, took over the common pleas judicial practice, as well as cases pending in two general courts formerly held at Kaskaskia and Cahokia, and the court ceased to exist. (Pope's digest, 312, 333, 343, 345.) In 1816 legal jurisdiction was again divided between circuit courts and a court of appeals. (Laws passed by the legislative council and house of representatives of Illinois territory, 1815–16, p. 48; Laws passed by the legislative council and house of representatives of Illinois territory, 1816–17, p. 27.) In 1818 the court of appeals' jurisdiction was divided between two general courts sitting at Kaskaskia and Shawneetown. (Laws passed by the general assembly of Illinois Territory, 1817-18, p. 90.) The act of 1819 left the jurisdiction of these two courts to the supreme court.

courts of local jurisdiction such as this is coming more and more to be recognized by historical students. Such court records, by revealing the crimes most frequently committed and the penalties inflicted, afford an index to the moral standards of past and present generations. Common law and chancery records afford interesting information on business methods and property relations, though the records as they come more and more to be stereotyped forms lose this interest. The defect is fully atoned for, however, by the transcripts of evidence that may be found for recent cases appealed to higher courts. One of them, for example, may preserve a lawyer's attempt to elicit from a witness the fact that the community considered a thrifty old farmer had grown so "queer" that overreaching him in a trade was no longer ethical. Such a record exactly perpetuates that part of a generation's standards and habits of life which ordinarily is most fugitive.[1]

When considered from the point of view of archive economy, the circuit clerk's records present the same problems that in different forms appear elsewhere in the county record rooms. Among these problems may be specified, the determination of the point of balance between printed forms and longhand or typed entries at which the maximum economy of space will result, the usefulness of loose-leaf records, the utilization of the vault space wasted by printed-form books that have been half filled and then abandoned, and the best methods of filing and protecting papers. To be specific, the formal record of the court's proceedings suggests the question as to the degree of economy in the use of printed forms for the recording of formal orders; the naturalization record, which always follows one of several different forms, is a more extreme case of the same problem; the court fee books are a less extreme one. The dockets are an object lesson in the economy of the loose-leaf docket over the bound book. And lastly from the archival sins of omission and commission sinned by court clerks in filing papers, texts for a dozen sermons might be drawn.

[1]In addition, the Negro freedom papers, etc., recorded with the circuit clerk afford us light on the puzzling but interesting question of the extent to which slavery survived in the state—though of course these must be studied with the records of indentures and the tax lists to be found in the county clerk's office.

Legislation has determined the general character of the court record proper—the formal record of proceedings had before the circuit judge such as motions, trials, decisions, verdicts. A series of laws in the twenties repeatedly forbade clerks to keep a "complete record" unless one of the parties specifically requested that it be kept, or title to real estate was involved. The "complete record" that in many clerks' offices has been kept down to recent times in separate volumes is usually a record of the testimony of witnesses, depositions, etc., in certain special cases. But the record proper of the circuit court has remained a mere formal entry of the more important proceedings toward the legal adjudication of cases.[1]

[1] An act of March 31, 1819, required clerks to keep complete records of all proceedings and determinations of the court. (Laws of 1819, p. 381, sec. 33.) An act of March 30 required the clerk to keep a complete record of all the passages, evidence, etc., at the trial of a case in which title to land was not involved only when a party to the suit required him to do so. (Ibid., 350.) Two years later, section 33 of the act of March 31 was repealed in so far as it might be presumed to require a complete record in cases where real estate was not involved. (Laws of 1821, p. 11.) There is a similar act in the Laws of 1816-17, p. 65. The interpretation put on the section seems forced. The prohibition was repeated in an act of January 29, 1827, and the act of February 21, 1845. Laws of 1827, p. 316; Laws of 1845, p. 40.

In almost every county the circuit court record exhibits an interesting evolution. It begins ordinarily with a small, blue, paper-covered book, and in volume after volume increases in both size of page and thickness, till at last it attains the large folio size and the five hundred page volume that ordinarily is used throughout county record offices. The records show also a tendency to differentiation that in the majority of counties is almost uniform. In the beginning law, chancery, and criminal suits are all recorded in the same volume, but ordinarily about 1850—the date, may however, be as early as the thirties or as late as the sixties—chancery comes first to be recorded in a separate volume and then to be assigned a series of its own; later this series also may be differentiated into a court record and a decree record. It is easy to see why chancery should be so set apart, for the recording of a chancery suit requires the entering at length of long papers, that do not—as in common law and criminal proceedings—adhere to conventional forms. Law and criminal records do not branch into separate volumes or separate series till the period 1870-1875. Exceptions in past and present practices to the above statements can be cited, but they represent the ordinary process of development in the court record proper.

Separate records for court action in the naturalization of aliens have been used almost without exception for half a century.[1] The material recorded has varied from time to time, but till recently has included for each adult alien, first the declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and second his application for final papers, which includes his oath, the affidavits of his witnesses to his continuous residence in the United States, his renunciation of foreign allegiance, and his admission to United States citizenship; in the case of a minor alien whose father died before taking out final papers, or in the case of a soldier or sailor honorably discharged from the service of the United States, the declaration of intention is unnecessary. As the statutes have prescribed exact forms for these records, even the smallest counties have usually procured separate books of printed forms for use in recording them.

[1] In naturalizing, circuit judges have enforced statutes of the United States, for with the single exception of fixing fees for naturalization, the state has passed no legislation on the subject. What is here said of naturalization records applies especially to the period before 1906.

The older county naturalization records are an excellent object lesson of the havoc that results when printed records are not carefully used. Small counties, far inland, removed from the main routes of immigration, have bought large folios of naturalization forms and have seen them first acquire dust on the shelves in idleness, and then, after a new federal statute or departmental regulation has prescribed new forms, go into disuse. Worse still, from 1872 to 1906, the waste went on concurrently in the county court. Indeed, in examining the records of a county, one comes to look as a matter of course for one naturalization record book ending abruptly in 1896 or 1898, a second beginning and ending in 1902, 1903 or 1904, and a third terminating in 1906, and not one of them a tenth used! Very often there are separate books of declarations, of final papers, of minors' papers, of soldiers' and sailors' papers, or perhaps books presenting a combination of these. If these volumes do not repose in an unfit storeroom and accustom the clerk to the idea that any place is good enough for old records, they take up precious room in the vault.

The problem, however, has finally reached a solution that perhaps is applicable to other county records. Since 1906 all books for naturalization have been supplied to the circuit clerks by the United States bureau of immigration and have remained the property of the United States government. The forms are furnished in small volumes—for small counties volumes of fifty pages, which preclude all chance of waste. The system is one that could well be applied by the state government to such registers of licenses as the counties now or in the future may be required to keep.[1]

All this naturally prompts consideration of the extent to which printed forms may be used successfully with the court record proper. In many instances such forms have been used with success in the case of common law proceedings. These usually follow certain well-defined forms, some of which, such as the confession of judgment in term and in vacation,[2] and the entering of judgment by default, occur so often that even in small counties separate printed records for them appear practicable. Such records have been very generally used, and, it is true, have not always been successful; like many other printed record books,

[1] There has been comparatively little waste in the recording of physicians' certificates so far, as each county has not more than one or two volumes of printed forms of them. In the case of nurses' certificates, a few counties of their own accord are utilizing smaller books that may prevent waste. But in the case of stallion licenses, counties ordinarily have purchased books that seem to be too large. The form prescribed for such certificates has already been changed once by legislative enactment. Since the policy of the state seems more and more to direct the recording of such certificates with the county officers, future legislation might well include some provision for the supply of the requisite printed-form records.

[2] Sometimes entitled a "narr. & cognovit."

they have been abandoned after a few years but half used. In this instance, it is difficult to see why economical printed forms cannot be devised. For criminal records not more than two forms ordinarily have been used—one a record of the discharge of a prisoner on his recognizance, and the other of prisoners' paroles. The former has been generally in use since 1868 or 1869, and the latter only for the last few years. Neither book has filled up rapidly, leading one to conclude that if the forms employed have not been misfits, the books procured have certainly been too large.

Chancery records are the circuit clerk's most difficult problem in record keeping. Unlike common law and criminal procedure, chancery does not follow conventional forms; its very nature implies that it must deal differently with each suit. Accordingly the papers that must be spread on the court records, such as bills, awards, partitions, masters' reports, and decrees are of varying form and often of considerable length. This fact has made the use of a printed form record impracticable in the majority of counties; and a printed book containing forms of foreclosure, decree of sale, partition, and divorce, adopted a few years ago by many offices, has either been discontinued, or else is little used. In Cook county courts printed forms are used for divorce and foreclosure, but even here the economy of space is not perfect. In most counties the chancery record seems fated to occupy a long series of volumes, typewritten or written in longhand.

To the smaller county, it is true, the loose-leaf chancery record offers some relief. In Coles county especially it has been employed with marked success for partition records. Clerks urge in its favor the fact that it enables them to keep together all the proceedings of a partition suit—petition, report, and decree—which ordinarily in a case extending over several terms of court would be in different parts of one or more volumes. On the other side it may be said that such a use of it would make it impossible to number the pages until the volume is completed. However, the general arguments for and against the introduction of the loose-leaf record into court work have been considered elsewhere.[1]

In the majority of counties the fee books—the registers of the court fees earned and collected in each case—are printed form records and very wasteful ones. The forms ordinarily used allot to each case a separate page which exhibits a triumph of the typesetter's art. It is ruled, divided, and subdivided, so that it may contain printed lists of thirty or forty possible fees in civil, criminal, and chancery cases. Small flanking subdivisions of the page contain separate spaces for the fees of witnesses, sheriff, constable, and justice of the peace, and for their signatures in receipt. The necessity of using different forms of this masterpiece for common law, chancery, and criminal cases, together with frequent changes in the law prescribing the amounts of fees have helped to load up county vaults with half-used fee books. The printed-form fee book, it is true, has its advantages. Probably it is advantageous for the clerk of a small office to have his scale of fees constantly on the page before him. Some clerks, moreover, aver that in accounting for fees they have collected for others, they find that the various subdivisions afford a convenient check on the final balance. But these advantages cannot atone for the waste in volume after volume of two-thirds to three-fourths of each record page.

The fee book, indeed, in its evolution has passed through forms distinctly preferable to the present one.[1] The earliest fee books are often paper-bound ledgers such as formerly were used for recording of grocery bills, and the details of fees are scribbled down the long columns with little more care than that employed by the grocer's clerk. In the fifties and sixties a better record came into use: a folio ruled in ledger fashion, in which the fees of three or four cases were sometimes entered on a single page, separated only by horizontal ruling. In some counties, notably the larger ones, this form has survived with the addition of a printed sentence or two. The page is cross-ruled and divided to hold the records of three cases, the amount of the docket fee is printed in each division, and a blank space is left for the entry of additional fees as they accrue. In some counties such as Vermilion, not even this form is used, and all entry is done by hand. A return from the printed form to either of the above would be advantageous.

Of the various circuit-court records known as dockets, the judgment and execution dockets are at once the most important and the most carefully kept. They are sufficiently described by the act of 1827 which directs clerks to enter all judgments or decrees alphabetically, showing the names of parties, the date, the nature of the judgment, the amount of the debt, damages and costs, references to the court record, and entry of satisfaction by execution or otherwise.[1] Whenever, therefore, a judgment for a sum of money is entered by the court against a party to a proceeding before it, the details regarding it are registered in this docket, together with any execution against personal property or real estate issued in pursuance of the judgment. As an unsatisfied judgment is a potential lien for seven years on real estate owned by the person against whom it is obtained, the judgment docket is of the first importance in establishing the fact that a given property is unincumbered. For many years judgments and executions were docketed in different books, but in most counties they have been kept since the seventies in the judgment and execution docket. This book has additional spaces opposite each judgment entered for the entry of the various executions issued and for memoranda of the returns on them.

[1] Fee books were prescribed to the clerks by an act of January 17, 1825, but in the majority of cases they do not appear much before 1835 or 1840. (Laws of 1825, p. 147; Laws of 1833, p. 297.) The clerk's fee book, however, is mentioned in earlier statutes. See the Indiana act of 1804. (Laws passed at the first session of the general assembly of the Indiana territory, 53.) Obviously the intent of the fee book originally was to prevent clerks from taking advantage of the multiplicity of small fees to cheat litigants.

The docketing of mechanics' liens in a separate book for most counties dates from about the year 1887,[2] when the legislature prescribed a form by which mechanics or contractors might file liens for services against the owners of the buildings and real estate on which they had worked or for which they had supplied material. The act prescribed as the form of the docket the name of the lienor, the amount of the lien, the date of filing, person and property filed against. The record as kept practically follows this order. It should be noted, however, that as early as 1833 the law had prescribed that suits for mechanics' liens be docketed in the common law docket.[1]

[1] The Revised code of 1827 (p. 318), prescribed also the entering in a separate book of the sheriffs' returns on executions.

[2] Act of May 31, 1887, Laws of 1887, p. 219.

Of the court dockets proper, the general docket is the only one for which the association of name and form in any degree persists from county to county. The revision of 1874,[2] directed the keeping of a docket "in which shall be entered all suits in order commenced." As kept it usually includes the date the suit was begun and entered, the general and term numbers assigned it, the attorneys and parties to the suit, the party appealing, the court from which appeal was taken, the action, the process, issues, and remarks. It may begin indeed in the fifties. The form used in Cook county varies from that given above, different forms being used in the circuit and superior offices, but the character of the record remains the same.

As to the various term dockets, judges' dockets, clerks' dockets, and bar dockets, the legal prescription for them is found in acts of 1827 and 1872,[3] which direct circuit clerks each term to furnish the judge and the bar with copies of a docket, detailing for each case the names of parties, cause of action,

[1] Laws of 1833, p. 448. An act of February 14, 1863 required the clerks of Cook, Alexander, Union, Peoria, Williamson, Bureau, Putnam, Marshall, Woodford, Pulaski, Edgar, Marion, Franklin, Henry, Fulton, and De Kalb to keep dockets of mechanics' and laborers' liens. (Laws of 1863, p. 57.) The act was extended to Adams county in 1865, and in 1867 to Lake, McHenry, Boone, Winnebago, Peoria, Marshall, Stark, Putnam, Knox, Mason, Fulton, Kane, Du Page, Will, Coles, St. Clair and Hancock, but was repealed altogether in 1869. (Laws of 1865, p. 91; 1 Laws of 1867, p. 133; act of April 5, 1869, Laws of 1869, p. 257.) Why these counties should have been singled out is difficult to determine. The act of 1869 provided, however, for a mechanics' liens list of more rudimentary form. The Revised statutes, 1874 (p. 666), directed that mechanics' liens be docketed as chancery actions.

[2] Revised statutes, 1874, p. 262.

[3] Act of January 29, 1827, Laws of 1827, p. 312; Laws of 1871-72, p. 338. Earlier acts, however, refer to the clerk as docketing cases, or apportioning them on the docket.

and plaintiff's attorney. The books ordinarily made in pursuance of this act and termed clerks' dockets and judges' dockets are lists of the cases set for trial each term, giving the number, the title, the attorneys, the action, the court's order at the last term the case came up, and a space for the order of the court at the term for which the docket is prepared. The series of such dockets are often fragmentary, and very often the volumes are insufficiently labeled and dated. The bar docket is apt to be even more fragmentary and often gives merely the number, action, parties, and attorneys. At best all these dockets are rough registers, and important only because—in the case of clerks' or judges' dockets—the court record is written up from the minutes they contain.

The loose-leaf principle has been applied to dockets in many counties with marked success. The older practice of writing up a separate docket for each term wastes space and time. Before a case is finally adjudicated, it may easily come up at ten or twelve terms, and be docketed in ten or twelve term dockets which finally will help to load the vault with old books. In the loose-leaf docket, on the contrary, one page is used for each case, the particulars of number, action, attorneys, etc., being entered on a heading, and the various orders of the court from term to term on ruled lines below. When the case is finally adjudicated, the leaf is removed to a storage binder. This system, while it could not be safely tried in a large county, is undoubtedly an economy in a small one.

One or two less important forms of record may here be mentioned briefly and dismissed. Chief among them is the record of transcripts from justices of the peace. Under acts of 1819 and 1821 such transcripts were filed in the clerk's office in case of certiorari, appeal, or levy on real estate.[1] An act of 1847[2] required that the clerk record in a well-bound book all transcripts filed for the purpose of obtaining executions against real estate. The transcript so recorded, the law directed, was to include a copy of the original and each subsequent summons or process issued by the justice, the judgment, and the return on any executions issued, and the certificate of the justice of the peace to the transcript. A record of this sort in the great majority of counties has been kept since 1848 and the years immediately succeeding, although in many it does not appear till 1855–1861, and in a few not until the seventies and eighties. As kept at present it ordinarily is a printed-form book whose pages are prepared on the same model as the ordinary justice of the peace docket —summons at the top, fees of justice and constable on the margin, and the action of the justice court at length on the page.

Several other types of book record have been kept intermittently. Apart from the register of receipts and expenditures that circuit clerks like other officials have begun at varying dates,[3] the reports of the states' attorneys—of fees received, etc.—have at various times been recorded in books, though usually not earlier than 1872 or 1873. Since 1872 a few of the counties at irregular times have recorded indictments, but at present this is seldom done.[4] [4] The law at present prescribes that they shall be recorded when the judge directs. Revised statutes, 1913, ch. 38, sec. 413.

Last of all may be mentioned the index to the court records. In the majority of counties it dates back to 1858 in consequence of an act of 1865 requiring that the court records be indexed for seven years back. The form thus prescribed is elaborate and excellent, containing spaces for reference not only to the record proper, but also to the fee book, judgment docket, execution docket, the records of certificates of levy, sale, and redemption, etc. In addition it contains the particulars of the case, the title, the kind of action, and the time it was commenced and disposed of. In many cases the application to this index of the loose-leaf principle has secured perfect economy.[1]

Besides book records, the circuit clerk preserves the documents pertaining to the cases adjudicated in the court, each case in its own wrapper. In most instances these files date back as far as the book records. Where the earlier files are missing it probably is due to the fact that in the small rough office of the frontier county, papers could easily go astray. The content of the case papers varies from period to period and at best is difficult to define exactly. Thus an early criminal case file may contain only the indictment and the verdict. Later ones may also include depositions, subpœnas, jury lists, judges' instructions, motions, etc. In a civil case the file may include the document or note on which the action was brought, the summons, perhaps the subpœnas, and the verdict. Chancery files are necessarily more important than law files as they contain the papers representing the various stages of the suit—declarations, pleadings, bills, summons, orders, decrees, etc.[1] In 1847 the legislature prescribed[2] that instructions to the jury must thereafter be in writing. This has led indirectly to the looting of the court files of counties on the old eighth circuit by searchers for instructions drawn by the hand of the senior partner of Lincoln and Herndon. And as one lawyer regretfully told the writer, there are no more to be found!

For historical purposes this material has no distinctive value apart from the records accompanying it. Sometimes early case papers are amusing—indictments, for instance, in drawing which an overzealous and careful prosecutor has thought it necessary to reiterate all previous allegations at the beginning of each sentence. Interesting also are the diminutive slips of paper on which our grandfathers made out summons and subpœna and execution and warrant—slips often an inch and a half by four inches in size. However, except for the pleadings, etc., in chancery suits, the essential facts of the cases are concealed by the form of the documents, and at best they can tell us nothing but facts of names, indictments, verdicts—information of value only when tabulated. Yet even such material should emphatically not be condemned to destruction unexamined. The vital fact necessary to illumine a seemingly unimportant or meaningless book record may be concealed in these papers, and accordingly they should be saved until a careful examination has proved that they can add no information to that contained in the bound court records.

[1] The question has indeed been raised with the writer whether this material is not so important as to deserve being recorded at length.

[2] Act of February 25, 1847, Laws of 1847, p. 63.

The methods of filing and preserving case papers as well as the relative degrees of care bestowed on the various divisions of them have been determined by the demands of the lawyer rather than the historical student. Some lawyer in course of business may find a use for the earliest chancery papers, and chancery papers are usually filed carefully in the main vault. Generally common law papers in a quarter of a century have passed their usefulness, and therefore, in case the vault space is overcrowded, the earlier files are apt to take up their quarters in the storeroom. Criminal papers are likely to be called for only by persons curious to discover the shortcomings of their neighbors or political rivals, and usually are "dead" in five years. Accordingly, unless the office is extraordinarily well equipped with filing equipment, these papers, perhaps the most valuable in the office to the historical student, are cast into outer darkness.[1]

Various methods of indexing case papers are employed. Perhaps the best is to arrange the case files in the order in which the cases were first docketed,[2] assign them while in that order a sequence of numbers, and then index them alphabetically in a book or on cards. Another system occasionally used is to sort the files without regard to date by the first letters of plaintiffs' names into boxes similarly labeled. When so arranged the files are sometimes indexed alphabetically and

[1] In the smaller counties one notes a tendency to maintain files distinct from the case papers proper for miscellaneous papers. Some of these, such as the state's attorneys' reports, reports of coroners' inquests, mechanics' liens, and reports of county officers, could not well be included in files of case papers, but others, such as executions, justice of peace transcripts, masters' reports, confessions, bench warrants, receipts for prisoners by wardens of the penitentiaries, if filed with the proper cases would simplify the office files and bring a larger proportion of documents within the scope of the index to case papers.

[2] Sometimes they are numbered as disposed of.

sometimes not. Sometimes the cases when thus arranged are numbered beginning with "A" and then kept entirely by number. In a few counties the cases have been numbered in whatever confused order they happened to stand, and have then been indexed to the numbers thus assigned.

Of these methods the first seems to be the best. To illustrate the confusion that may result from the latter systems, it may be said that often when they are used it is literally impossible to determine the date at which a county's case papers begin without a three or four hour search in which case after case from the court record is laboriously checked through the index to the files in order to determine whether or not the file is extant. The chronological system of filing enables a historical worker to separate out without trouble the cases of a particular period, and at the same time enables the lawyer or clerk searching for a particular case to find it easily through an ordinary alphabetical index. In case the papers of a small county are arranged in boxes under the letters of the alphabet, it may, true enough, be possible for a lawyer to find a case without the index, but the advantage is counterbalanced by the fact that as papers accumulate it becomes more laborious to search all the boxes bearing a given letter than to consult an index.[1]

[1] At this point a digression to the question of the safe keeping of case papers may be permitted. Of course the files of current cases are being constantly used by lawyers; and although papers are filed in duplicate sets, the duplicate is often taken away, and the original alone left to be shown to inquirers. In small offices where the clerk and perhaps one or two deputies do all the work, the lawyers, who have free access to the vaults, help themselves to any original papers they desire, and frequently carry them off without receipting for them. Papers thus removed are often lost or mislaid and never returned. It is not likely that unscrupulous men could very easily defeat justice in this manner, and to exclude all persons from the vault and give out papers only on receipt would in many cases require an extra clerk. But while a solution of the difficulty in the average small office is not easily suggested, it is nevertheless true that the present condition is not a good one.

Two or three different types of filing material are in ordinary use. In a few counties the files are in pigeonholes where they accumulate dust and are easily disarranged. In others they are laid flat in old-fashioned pasteboard or tin boxes made to fit into pigeonholes. So disposed they are safe enough, except for fire, unless the boxes fall out and strew their contents on the floor, or are filled so full that the files crush. In the majority of offices, however, comparatively good and modern steel filingboxes are used. These boxes have a front, slightly larger than the document to be filed, which fits into the cases, and the documents stand upright in a tray behind it, and are clamped by a steel clamp at the back. Unless properly handled, filing boxes of this type can play worse havoc with a set of papers than almost anything else, even mice. If a box is filled too full, it becomes impossible to take a paper out and replace it without crumpling it and crushing the tops of the surrounding papers; if the examiner is in haste the paper is frequently left half in and half out and serves to jam the box into the case, where it sticks until the next inquirer in impatience pulls it out by main force, tearing one or a dozen papers by so doing. Whatever is done or not done with files, they should not be kept in a box too full to permit of the clamp working easily.

Almost as much mischief can be done by filing loose papers of varying heights in the same box. This is especially true if the larger papers are of inferior stock. An instance is afforded in certain counties where the case papers of the twenties and thirties—small, tightly folded bits of heavy paper—are filed with the larger and lighter papers of the forties and fifties. It will frequently happen under these circumstances that the earlier files will be perfectly preserved, and the later ones will be dust grimed, chipped, and crumpled by constant rubbing from the hands of persons in search of older papers.

The true remedy for such a condition is so far as possible to file all documents pertaining to each case in a heavy manila wrapper or filing envelope. Preferably this envelope should be made so that both ends and sides may be folded down, and should be tied with tape and not fastened with a rubber band. An envelope with all four sides and ends folding down over the papers would meet all ordinary variations in the amount of papers filed, and would effectually prevent all rubbing of the sort mentioned. This is still another reason for filing all papers connected with a case in the case papers. A better scheme yet, though possibly one not quite so economical of space, would be to file all papers flat in ordinary paper envelopes such as are used for filing correspondence, and to stand them on edge in a large drawer. Except in cases where the documents filed were few and brief, this method would probably not waste much space, and by obviating the necessity of folding papers and creasing or cracking them would greatly prolong their life.

For several reasons the records of the circuit clerk are an excellent introduction to the other county records; they follow a few comparatively simple and closely related series, which at the same time are sufficiently extensive to permit the effects of various methods of record keeping to be traced. Accordingly it has seemed best to allot extra space to consideration of the records of the office and the problems they afford. In the light of the foregoing detailed discussion of the circuit clerk's office, similar records or problems in other offices can be summarily discussed and dismissed.

III. Recorder

The recorder's office naturally presents itself for consideration along with the circuit clerk's; for in the great majority of counties the two offices have been administered by the same person since 1849. Till that year the office of recorder had been independent of the other county clerkships. Established by an act of the Northwest territory in 1795, it was continued by acts of the Indiana territory and of the state of Illinois. Till 1835, recorders were appointed by the territorial or state governors, and after that date elected by popular vote of their counties. In 1849 the legislature, availing itself of the option accorded it by the constitution of 1848, made the circuit clerk ex-officio recorder. In 1872, following the provisions of the constitution of 1870, separate recorders' offices were established in counties with population in excess of sixty thousand. Only thirteen counties, however, have so far attained the population necessary for separate offices.[1]

For the purposes of the present report the recorder's office and records may be considered entirely from the archivist's viewpoint. Since a recorder usually considers all his records as current, the historian has no cause to complain that in this office records of historical interest are neglected as "dead." Further the historical value of recorders' records has already been

There are mentions of a county register prior to 1795, with similar duties but no act defining them exists. See Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, p. 73. adequately discussed, and indeed is self-evident. Accordingly, once the records are made accessible to him by entry books and indexes the historical student here may well intrust the further care of his interests to the archivist.

Since it may almost be laid down as an axiom that no office of record is better than its indexes, the question of the recorder's entry books and indexes is of the first importance. Of indexes there are two distinct types, the "grantor-grantee index," which enables a searcher to trace a transfer of real estate by the name of a party involved, and the tract index which shows any and all transfers that affect or have affected title to a given piece of property. In grantor-grantee indexes the content of each transfer—parties, land involved, consideration, instrument, dates, book and page recorded—is registered in one part alphabetically under the name of the grantor, in the other under the name of the grantee. The tract index, on the other hand, follows the divisions of land as established either by United States surveys or the recorded plats of towns and villages. On the page set apart in it for each section or quarter section of a township or for each lot of a town plat, are noted all transfers that in any way affect title to the parcel in question. The grantor-grantee index supplies information as to the past or present real estate holdings of a person; the tract index, information as to the past and present owners of a particular tract of land.

It is apparent that the grantor-grantee index—the ordinary alphabetical index—is the one that naturally would first suggest itself; and in fact it has existed in one form or another from the first. Thus the act of 1829 defining the duties of the recorder required him to index each separate book of records.[1] In 1847 a new act required him to keep a complete index to all documents to be recorded.[2] The exact manner of keeping the indexes, however, varies from county to county. In some counties deeds and mortgages have been separately indexed since the fifties. In nearly all a separate index to marginal releases of mortgages has been used since 1905. In others separate indexes to chattel mortgages are kept.[3] Finally in one or two cases, the indexes to grantors and grantees assume the form of indexes to the entry book, and are bound in the same volumes with it.

The tract index is primarily the tool of a maker of abstracts of title. Every page of a well kept tract index is indeed a chain of title to the piece of land it concerns, and after the judgment dockets of county and circuit courts and records of tax sales have been searched to ascertain that within seven years no unsatisfied judgments lie against the owner, and the probate records have been examined for evidence of heirship, it needs only to be expanded by reference to the documents to be a complete abstract.[4] Where a record office lacks such an index, the abstracter must either keep one of his own, or else when searching for a title

[3] This is really the logical system to follow, as the chattel mortgage does not affect real estate, and runs for but three years.

[4] In 1887 recorders in counties having distinct recorder's offices were allowed to keep indexes to judgments and to tax sales in case they also kept tract indexes. (June 16, 1887, Laws of 1887, p. 256.) So far, however, Cook is almost the only county where any such record is kept. The Revised statutes, 1874 (p. 834), required recorders to keep tract indexes when required to do so by the county board.

discover the name of the original patentee, search for his name on the grantor index to discover the first transfer affecting the land, then search for the name of the grantee in the grantor index, and so continue.[1] However, it is needless to say that the tract index is an important adjunct in any search of the land records, and is valued accordingly by a good officer, though it is not surprising that a few recorders are at times inclined to regard the maintenance of the index as a task enjoined on them for the benefit of abstracters.

The entry book is the third of the general summaries of the recorders' records. It is simply a register of instruments filed for record in the order of filing, and specifies the number, date, parties, book and page of record, and the return of the document; also the land affected, the consideration, etc. The act of 1795, prescribed the keeping of a record of this type, and later acts have more carefully defined its content.[2] As was said above, the grantor-grantee index sometimes takes the form of an index to each volume of the entry book.

Turning next to the records proper, we may first dismiss a few comparatively unimportant ones. In 1849 the legislature prescribed the recording of the bonds of town collectors.[3] A separate record of this type in some instances was begun as early as 1850; but in many counties such bonds were recorded in the miscellaneous record till much later. Indeed 1889–1890 is almost the ruling date for the beginning of the record. In 1910 and 1911 recorders generally began a record of stallion certificates issued by the state board of agriculture and presented for record in the various counties. These are recorded in printed-form books, usually three different forms being bound in one book for recording the certificates of pure bred, cross bred, and grade stallions, respectively, and three other forms in a second for the yearly renewals of the licenses. It is probable that the ordinary county has adopted altogether too bulky books for the purpose, and is likely to find the form changed or the record discontinued before they are used up.

Among the more important records, those of the county surveyors may claim first attention. Usually they are intermittent in character. Sometimes for long periods no survey records are extant, perhaps because none were made, perhaps because the records have been lost. In certain counties these records have an early beginning. In Clinton, Randolph, and St. Clair they date from 1829, in Clark from 1830, in La Salle from 1833, in Pike from 1834, and in Will, Tazewell, and Madison from 1835. Since 1885 the law has required that they be kept in the recorder's office.[1] Closely akin to the surveyor's record is the transcript of United States surveys in the county, procured either from the surveyor general of Illinois and Missouri at St. Louis, or from the custodian of the United States surveys at Springfield. Although the statutes require the counties to procure this record, a few have not done so.[2]

A still more important series, second only in importance to the great body of transfer records proper, is composed of the records of certificates of levy, sale, and redemption. Since 1841 it has been the duty of sheriffs when levying on real estate to record a certificate of levy in the county where the real estate lies—obviously that in it there might be some record of the lien.[1] Since 1845 the law has required both sheriffs and masters in chancery to record in the county where the real estate in question lies all certificates of purchase or of redemption from sale or foreclosure issued by them.[2] The record, which the act of 1841 directed to be kept in a separate volume, dates in a few counties from 1841 or thereabouts, and of recent years has been carried in printed books, some containing two or more forms. Very rarely does the record run to a greater length than a dozen volumes, and often it is limited to two or three.

The most important record in every recorder's office, as well as the most perplexing from the viewpoint of archive economy, is the record of deeds, mortgages, and other real estate transfers. In all instances it begins with the formation of the county. Its formal legal recognition and authorization came in the territorial acts which directed the recorder to provide parchment or good large books of royal or other large paper well bound and covered, and in them to record such instruments entitled to record as should be presented to him for that purpose. The series of records as begun is in its way a monument to the growth and development of the county. The small quarto volumes of manuscript records, often, in spite of the statute, on paper so inferior as to necessitate recopying, gradually wax into large folios of printed forms, and increase till they are numbered in the hundreds and divided into new series.

To frame a general statement to cover the differentiations that in the various counties have taken place in this record is impossible. In the recorder's office in Chicago with only a few exceptions all volumes are numbered on the same series. In the ordinary county, however, the series have been divided. In the majority of cases, a separate series of mortgage records is begun in the fifties, although in a few counties, such as Tazewell, Bureau, and Boone, this is done twenty years earlier and in many more, twenty years later. In a few instances separate series of releases and of oil or gas leases have also been begun—the former at various dates and the latter usually in the first years of this century. In some counties separate records for articles of incorporation and for the certificates of election of trustees of Odd Fellows' lodges and other similar organizations are also to be found. In practically every county, plats are now recorded in a separate book with larger pages than the deed record. Such records have been begun at dates ranging from 1834 in Tazewell, to 1907 in Edwards.[1]

A separate series for chattel mortgages exists in some county seats and might well be established in all. The ephemeral character of chattel mortgages makes it desirable that they be kept separate from the permanent records affecting real estate. Where chattel records are numbered in the same series with the mortgages and are later condemned to the basement they leave behind them unsightly numerical gaps. Chattel records should not only be numbered on a separate series, but also should be kept in a separate index and possibly in a separate entry book.

[1] There is a series of acts providing for the recording of plats. An act of January 4, 1825 provides that the recorder record plats of towns laid out by the county commissioners or other persons. (Laws of 1825, p. 53.) By an act of March 5, 1891, he was to record relocations of railroad rights of way. (Laws of 1891, p. 183.) In general the most important plats filed for record with the recorder are those of towns laid out by public officers or by private persons.

Indeed the legislature may find it advisable to permit the destruction of certain chattel mortgage records within a given time after the expiration of their validity. In its present form the record often has very little interest for the historical student, representing as it does the security taken by a company selling bicycles, pianos, organs, sewing machines, etc., on the instalment plan; and here an entry book can easily afford all information of value. Further, to allow the destruction of these records would for some counties only be to validate a present custom of destroying the old volumes outright or else leaving them in dusty cellar vaults or garrets, gradually to disintegrate with age and neglect.

Economy of space in records can be obtained only through economical methods of recording. Ordinarily recorders employ either books of blank forms to be filled out with pen and ink or book typewriter, blank books in which the instruments are entered at length by book typewriter or by longhand, or thirdly loose-leaf books whose leaves are filled out on an ordinary typewriter and then inserted in the volume. To determine a point of balance between these three methods, at which will be obtained maximum economy for all the hundred and two counties, is in view of the variation in the volume of recording impossible. The individual clerks must be trusted to single out the methods best adapted to their offices. Here it is possible only to offer a few suggestions based on observation of the methods employed in various counties and of the results attained.

There can be no doubt that printed forms when properly handled will economize record space. With quitclaim and warranty deeds they have been used successfully ever since the early fifties, and since standard forms of these instruments have come into general use, the smallest county can fill volume after volume of printed forms without wasting a page. The successful use of printed forms with ordinary mortgages is more difficult. There is no one prevalent form as in the case of warranty or quitclaim deeds. Of mortgages there are, to name only a few, long forms, short forms, forms including insurance clauses or power to appoint a receiver, "cutthroat forms," and "equitable forms." There are, moreover, various forms of trust deeds, assignments of mortgage, and releases, any one of which may be presented for record. In certain counties clerks have endeavored to meet the problem by simplifying the practice. At their own expense they have distributed to lawyers printed mortgages corresponding to the forms of their record books, and they report good results in economy of space. Further, by ordering volumes with several different forms bound together and with blank pages for recording instruments that do not fit the forms, they have endeavored to maintain a balance in the printed forms they carry that will correspond to the proportions in instruments presented for record, and prevent record space in form books from lying idle. Undoubtedly both of these methods are well-nigh essential to successful handling of printed forms with bound books.

There are even worse difficulties attending the use of printed forms for mortgage records. Almost any recorder will lay the responsibility for the major portion of his woes on the farm loan companies. At present a large proportion of rural mortgages are made by such companies—either local bankers or national insurance companies—or else by building loan associations. Each of these persons or companies usually has a special printed form which is very elaborate. At times it takes the shape of a trust deed or assignment of mortgage and frequently it is coupled with a release form equally elaborate. Printed-form records in such a case seem obvious, but very often when a company either changes its form or goes out of business in a locality—in county offices about the state one great insurance company is notorious for these practices—they result in wasted volumes in from one to forty counties. Here again the best remedies are the use of volumes containing a half-dozen different forms, and most of all, vigilance on the part of the clerks.

Finally, certain instruments drawn in unusual forms will always have to be recorded with pen or typewriter. In some cases such documents are now written on perforated sheets with an ordinary typewriter and inserted in a loose-leaf record. So far only miscellaneous papers are so recorded. In certain instances it would seem feasible to use printed form loose leaves. If the stationery companies would supply clerks with perforated leaves in the unusual forms in quantities of a dozen or less, to be inserted as needed in loose-leaf volumes, all the saving possible from printed forms could be obtained without the slightest chance of waste space. The legality of the loose-leaf record, however, is at present questionable. Probably the blank book filled out with typewriter or pen must still be used for very many instruments.

IV. County Clerk

The records of the probate and county clerks, like those of the circuit clerk and recorder, are closely associated. The records in the second pair of offices, however, are far more complex than those in the first. The probate records, which in all but ten counties are kept by the county clerk, are more intricate than any other local court records; and the records of the county clerk's office proper—county court records, county board of supervisors' records, taxation records, vital statistics records—afford a variety and intricacy which far surpasses that on the other side of the courthouse, and can hardly be mastered without constant reference to the legislation producing it.

In the earliest Illinois counties the county commissioners' records, if traced back to the days of the Northwest territory, merge in the proceedings of a court whose name suggests to the historical student the administrative functions it was to assume—the court of general quarter sessions. As originally established this court was held by justices of the peace appointed in each county by the governor.[1] Its earlier jurisdiction was legal; and for some years it by no means enjoyed the monopoly of local government acquired by its successors, for one of its duties was setting off townships and appointing constables, overseers of the poor, and town clerks for them.[2] Further, the duty of appointing special commissioners of assessments was assigned to its judicial rival, the common pleas court, and only gradually did the quarter sessions draw into its power complete control of them. Moreover,[1] till 1795, the power of granting tavern licenses was partly in the hands of the commissioners appointed by the governor,[2] and even after that year partly in the hands of the governor himself. The name of this court disappears from Illinois history in 1805 when the territorial assembly of Indiana intrusted the functions of the quarter sessions, common pleas, and orphans' courts to a common pleas court.[3] This court the Illinois territorial legislature abolished in 1814, giving its administrative functions to a county court, and its judicial powers to the supreme court.[4] The first state constitution transferred the county court's functions to three elected commissioners, who as the county commissioners' court exercised almost complete administrative control of the county. The rudimentary townships that had begun to take shape in territorial days disappeared soon after 1818.[5] Only toward 1848 did the administrative authority centered in the county commissioners' court begin to disintegrate.

The constitution of 1848 changed the system of county government in very important aspects. It created a county judge with civil and criminal jurisdiction, who in addition assumed the probate duties since 1821 exercised by the probate judge. It further left the counties free to choose between township organization and the old county organization. Counties electing the first were to be divided into corporate townships, which should each elect its member of a board of supervisors to administer county affairs. In case a county rejected township organization the county judge and two elected associates assumed the function of the old board.[1]

The constitution of 1870, as interpreted by legislative action in 1872, left the counties the alternative of township organization with the board of supervisors, and county organization with an elective board of three county commissioners. The constitution further erected in each county a county court with an elected judge, who in addition to ordinary court and criminal jurisdiction exercised certain special functions such as probate.[2] An act of 1877, however, provided for separate probate courts in counties with a population of one hundred thousand—a figure since reduced to seventy thousand.[3]

At the present time, therefore, the county clerk has a variety of functions and a corresponding variety of records. He is in all but ten counties custodian of the old probate records and keeper of the current ones. He keeps the records of the county court, and also the records of the county judge's proceedings in certain functions distinct from those of the county court. As clerk to the board of county commissioners or supervisors he records their proceedings. Besides keeping the records of courts and boards, in his capacity as clerk he performs on his own initiative certain duties connected with taxation, such as keeping books, levying taxes, and recording their collection by judgment and sale; he also records vital statistics and various miscellaneous papers, licenses, etc. In considering these various records it will be convenient to begin with the county court records, and to take next in order the records of the county commissioners or supervisors, the records of taxation, the marriage, birth, and death records, and lastly the miscellaneous records.

The present county courts exist under the act of April 5, 1872, passed in pursuance of the provisions of the state constitution. The act assigned the court concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in all cases involving amounts not exceeding five hundred dollars where justices of the peace had jurisdiction, as well as exclusive jurisdiction in all criminal cases in which the penalty was not death or imprisonment in the penitentiary.[1] An act of May 21, 1877 gave it concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in all cases in which a justice of the peace had jurisdiction and in which the sum at issue was less than one thousand dollars, and in all criminal cases above indicated.[2]

[1] Laws of 1871-72, p. 325.

[2] Laws of 1877, p. 77. Among the minor results of the carnival of special and private laws cut short by the prohibitory clause of the constitution of 1870 were additions to the jurisdiction of certain county courts. Excluding laws affecting Cook county, whose extant court records go no farther back than October of 1871, the legislation may be briefly summarized as follows. In 1845 a special county court was created in Jo Daviess county having jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court; it was abolished in 1849. (Act of March 1, 1845, Laws of 1845, p. 275; act of February 8, 1849, 1 Laws of 1849, p. 67.) In 1855 Peoria's county court was given complete jurisdiction in common law, and jurisdiction in misdemeanors where the penalty was not in excess of $100. (Act of February 9, 1855, Laws of 1855, p. 194; repealed February 18, 1861, 1 Laws of 1861, p. 109.) In 1853 the county court of Lake was assigned concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court at common law

The criminal, common law, and naturalization records of the county court are the same as those of the circuit court, and the same remarks apply equally to both. Owing to the fact that they are slighter in extent, printed forms where they have worked badly in one case have worked still worse in the other. Thus records of judgments by default and by confession have not produced so great economy of space in the county court as in the circuit. Fee books in the one have suffered as a result of the overuse of printed forms as much as in the other. The extant naturaliza-or statute law up to $500. Similar extensions were granted to Tazewell and Carroll in 1857, in the case of Tazewell the extension involving almost complete jurisdiction at common law. (Act of February 12, 1853, Laws of 1853, p. 262; acts of February 14 and 16, 1857, Laws of 1857, pp. 36, 55.) The act affecting Carroll was repealed February 19, 1859. (Laws of 1859, p. 103.) In 1854 La Salle was given jurisdiction in all civil suits under $1,000. (Act of February 27, 1854, Laws of 1854, p. 239.) In 1865 it was given concurrent civil jurisdiction with the circuit court. (Act of February 16, 1865, Laws of 1865, p. 37.) The earlier act had also applied to McHenry, Winnebago, and Boone, which two last were given concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit courts in law or equity in 1857. (Acts of February 18, 1857, Laws of 1857, pp. 123, 150.) The benefit of the act for Winnebago, Boone, and McHenry was extended to Grundy and Livingston by act of February 15, 1855. (Private Laws of 1855, p. 656.) This act was repealed for Winnebago and Boone in 1863. (Act of February 12, 1863, Laws of 1863, p. 28.) In 1857 Whiteside was also given concurrent civil jurisdiction to the sum of $1,500, but this act was repealed in 1859. (Act of February 18, 1857, Laws of 1857, pp. 128, 100; act of February 19, 1859, Laws of 1859, p. 103.) In 1859, an act of February 24 extended the jurisdiction of Vermilion, Bureau, Warren, and Iroquois to $500. (Laws of 1859, p. 96.) Two years later in certain special types of cases, Gallatin was given jurisdiction of $5,000. (Act of February 21, 1861, 1 Laws of 1861, p. 106.) In 1863 De Kalb's county court was allotted full civil jurisdiction, and Crawford's, Jasper's, and Cumberland's jurisdiction to $500. (Acts of February 21, 1863, Laws of 1863, pp. 26, 43.) The act regarding Crawford was repealed in 1869 and that regarding Jasper, February 16, 1865. (Laws of 1869, p. 145; Laws of 1865, p. 37.)

In addition to these Will was given extended jurisdiction in the case of sale of real estate by guardians, and Bond by act of February 19, 1859, extended jurisdiction to certain purposes. (Act of February 16, 1857, Laws of 1857, p. 145; Laws of 1859, p. 98.) The act extending the powers of Iroquois was repealed in 1861. (Act of February 18, 1861, 1 Laws of 1861, p. 109.) In 1869 an act was passed repealing an act of March 9, 1867, extending the jurisdiction of Marion. (Laws of 1869, p. 148; 2 Laws of 1867, p. 73.) Lastly an act of April 28, 1873 directed that the files in suits pending in county courts involving sums in excess of $500 should be transferred to the circuit courts of the respective counties. (Laws of 1873, p. 87.) In this sketch minor limitations on jurisdiction are omitted.

tion records of the county court—for till 1906 the county court had jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court in naturalization—correspond more nearly in bulk to those of the circuit court than is the case with law or criminal records. There has been almost as much waste of book space in the one case as in the other, and in either case—to digress an instant—it is extremely desirable that the few pages on which the records have been made should be taken out of the old folios and bound together. In short, the casual observer would detect no fundamental difference between the judicial records of county and circuit courts, except that the county records begin with 1872 and contain no chancery proceedings.

Besides its jurisdiction in law and criminal cases, the county court or sometimes the county judge has certain special jurisdictions. In matters of voluntary insolvencies, the act of April 10, 1872[1] prescribed that the debtor present his schedule of debts and assets, and the assignee his account to the county court. In many counties this business has gone into the ordinary court record, but in several cases, a separate record in the form of a schedule of debts and assets has existed since 1877 or 1878.

The county court also performs certain duties prescribed to it in elaborate detail by laws for drainage districts. When a petition for the establishment of a drainage district is presented to the court, the judge must first determine that the petitioners are either a majority of the land owners interested and own one-third of the land involved, or else are one-third of the landholders and own a major part of the land. After finding these facts and making formal entry of them, he appoints commissioners to draw a report with a survey of a feasible scheme for the operation of the district. The judge's confirmation of their report completes the legal promotion of the district, and the commissioners next proceed to assess damages and benefits. After being confirmed by a jury, an assessment roll is entered on the records of the court.[1]

[1] Laws of 1871-72, p. 490. The earlier jurisdiction was in the probate judge and the county court. 1 Laws of 1861, p. 105; Revised statutes, 1845, p. 282; Laws of 1833, p. 351.

Then the court has jurisdiction in cases of adoptions, dependent and delinquent children, mothers' pensions, and insanity. For certain of these categories, separate records are kept in but a few counties. Where kept, the record of adoptions is a printed form reciting the petition of the person desiring to adopt and the order of the court. The record for dependent and delinquent children is more common. Usually it takes the shape of a form giving the petition reciting that the child is dependent or delinquent, the hearing, the finding of the court, and the disposition made of the child.[2] Since 1913 in accordance with the act for mothers' pensions, a separate form record is occasionally kept reciting the facts established by the court with respect to the situation and need of the mother, and the order of the court for a pension. All these records, however, are by no means in universal use.

[1] In some counties a special assessment record of similar type is also kept. The commissioners of a drainage district also keep a record of their proceedings—the drainage record—which sometimes is found in the county clerk's office. Further, since 1895 a record of inheritance tax appraisements and receipts is occasionally found.

[2] In La Salle the record since 1886 has been kept in the form of a register setting forth the name and age of the child, the institution to which he was committed, the date, and remarks. See the act of June 18, 1883 (Laws of 1883, p. 168), as amended by act of June 23, 1885 (Laws of 1885, p. 238) and by that of March 28, 1895 (Laws of 1895, p. 81). For girls' cases see the act of May 28, 1879, Laws of 1879, p. 309.

Since the seventies the county court has had jurisdiction of insanity. The insanity record as ordinarily kept is a two-page printed form. It includes the petition representing that A. B. is distracted and unfit to be at large, the formal appearance of the person whose insanity is suggested, the appointment either of a jury of six, or a physicians' commission of two to try the case, the verdict as to the mental condition of the person on trial, and if he is found insane, information as to his bodily health, financial condition, etc. This in general reflects the procedure of recent years, except that previous to 1893 trial could be had only by a jury. The county judge or county court has had exclusive jurisdiction in lunacy proceedings since 1853, and concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court since 1851. Previous to that date the circuit court alone exercised jurisdiction.[1] The dates at which a separate record for insanity begins vary—the earliest, however, is 1852. In addition to the record proper the judge is required to keep a separate docket which gives the name of the person on trial, the petitioners, witnesses, and jury, the finding and the court's order.

Generally speaking, the main interest of the county court records is sociological. Apart from the existence of this interest in recent laws and criminal records, the special records just given summarize the local attitude toward defectives and dependents. The archivist, on the other hand, finds no serious problem here to arrest his attention. The sociological records, except in the case of a combined "insane and conservator's record" to be discussed later, call for no particular attention. Further, as was said above, the judicial records proper of the county court, while unsatisfactory at certain points from the archivist's standards, have precisely the same failings as the corresponding circuit court records. Accordingly the same strictures may apply in either case.

V. County Clerk—County Commissioners' Records

In every county clerk's office there is one record that dates from the creation of the county—the record of the board of supervisors, county court, or county commissioners' court. Naturally its contents vary from county to county with local conditions, and from period to period with the legislation defining the board's duties. An epitome of the contents to 1848 is possible. First the record usually contains a large body of material relating to roads—petitions for the establishment of new roads, reports of persons deputed to view and survey the proposed routes, records of the boundaries of road districts, appointments of road supervisors, and county appropriations for roads and bridges. Further there are petitions for licenses to keep ferries, taverns, and groceries, with the county board's memoranda of the rate and tolls assigned. Sometimes there are further records of oaths and bonds exacted from tavern keepers. There are records of proceedings on writs ad quod damnum issued to assess the damages done to adjacent land by mill dams.[1] There are lists of grand and petit jurors selected for service in the courts of the county.[2] There are records of the rates of taxes levied for the support of the county administration.

[1] Thus the act of March 25, 1819, prescribed the process on a writ of ad quod damnum when issued for a person who wishes to erect a mill and does not own the land on which the dam must abut. (Laws of 1819, p. 265.) The act of 1819 follows an Indiana territorial statute. Laws passed at the first session of the general assembly of the Indiana territory, 23.

[2] An act of February 18, 1823 directed the commissioners to select grand jurors; petty jurors were to be selected by them under acts of March 25, 1819, and May 7, 1873. Laws of 1819, p. 255; Laws of 1823, p. 182; and Laws of 1873, p. 108.

There are records showing the boundaries of election districts laid out by the commissioners,[1] and records of the names of judges of election appointed by them.[2] Further there are records of the election or appointment of constables and justices of the peace,[3] of school trustees and of persons appointed to take the state census. There are the records of apprenticeship, records of the evidence of freedom submitted to the commissioners by free blacks, records of the appointment of inspectors of tobacco, pork, etc., and reports by the overseers of the poor showing the sums for which they had farmed out the poor of the district.[4] Occasionally this catholic volume also contains a record of stock marks and brands registered with the county clerk, or a record of estrays; perhaps also it may even contain a probate record or two.

Of course certain types of business outlined above are frequently kept in separate volumes. Even at an early period many county clerks kept, beside their record of the county commissioners' proceedings, a volume in which they entered matters relating to roads. Usually about the fifties or sixties they began a register of county orders in a separate volume.[1] In general, however, the proposition stated in the previous paragraph holds good. Except for records of the collection of taxes, records of marriage licenses, and records of estrays or of marks and brands, the single series of county commissioners' records contains well nigh the complete story of the administration of the county down to the constitution of 1848. Unless some clerk has committed them to the flames, a file of documents approximately paralleling these records also exists. The importance of both record and documents to the historical student cannot be overestimated. Together they tell very much of what is best worth knowing of local government in early Illinois.

A necessary preliminary to a study of this record is a review of the legislation defining the duties of the county commissioners' court. First, as has been said, the constitution of 1818 established in each county an elective board of three members called the county commissioners' court. In expanding the constitutional provision, the act of March 22, 1819,[2] thus defined their duties. Its words may be quoted at length: "That said court in each county, shall have jurisdiction in all matters and things concerning the county revenue, and regulating and imposing the county tax, and shall have power to grant license for ferries and for taverns, and all other licenses and things that may bring in a county revenue; and shall have jurisdiction in all cases of public roads, canals, turnpike roads, and toll bridges, where the law does not prohibit the said jurisdiction of said courts; and shall have power and jurisdiction to issue all kinds of writs, warrants, process, and proceedings, by the clerk throughout the state, to the necessary execution of the power and jurisdiction with which this court is or may be vested by law. . . ." The court, it was expressly stated, had no legal jurisdiction in the ordinary sense, "but said court shall have jurisdiction in all cases where the matter or thing brought before the said court, relates to the public concerns of the county, collectively, and all county business." The function of the court was clearly designed to be administrative.

A large body of subsequent legislation expanded and itemized the duties prescribed to the court under this act. In general the acts affecting the contents of county commissioners' records and files are most easily grouped under a few special heads, such as licenses, roads, and schools; and in this manner the legislation proper will be discussed.

The subject of licenses is the simplest and accordingly may be dismissed first. Certain licenses, such as those for toll roads, bridges, etc., were not primarily designed to provide revenue.[1] Others were intended mainly to produce a fee revenue. Thus in 1819 the county commissioners were allowed to exact license fees from merchants, auctioneers, and peddlers.[2] Midway between the two classes comes the group of tavern licenses; but here the fees were usually fixed by act of the legislature.[3]

The duties of the county commissioners' court with respect to roads and schools can be explained only after a study of successive acts that constitute a body of legislation second in intricacy and variability only to that concerning the revenue. "Since then (1826-7)," wrote Governor Ford about 1847, "the legislature has been constantly making and amending laws for roads and schools, but there has been no good system of either."[1] Whether the student of Illinois statutes agrees with Ford's second statement or not, he will cordially indorse the first.

Public roads in Illinois were usually established either by special act of the legislature or else in conformity with general acts by the initiative of private persons. In either case a survey of the route was recorded with the county commissioners. These surveys are sometimes found in the county commissioners' records, occasionally in a road record by themselves. When a road was established by a special act, the act usually specified the manner in which it should be laid out.

territory directed the governor to appoint a commissioner in each county to grant tavern licenses to persons approved by quarter sessions; but in 1795 the function was transferred to the court of quarter sessions and to the governor. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, from July to December, 1792, ch. 1, p. 6; Maxwell's code, 96.) In 1805 the Indiana territorial legislature assigned the duty to the courts of common pleas. (Laws passed at the first session of the general assembly of the Indiana territory, 14.) It may be permissible to examine at this point the duties of the county commissioners' court with reference to the bounty on wolves' heads. An act of January 28, 1823 (Laws of 1823, p. 87) provided for the payment of a state bounty for the largest number of wolf scalps taken by any one person in the state and in each county; it allowed the counties also to offer bounties. An act of 1799 (Laws of the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1799, p. 226) had provided a bounty to be paid from the county rates. See also one of 1795 (Laws of the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1795, p. 112). The provision for a local bounty was reënacted in 1843 (Laws of 1843, p. 319), and 1877 (Laws of 1877, p. 217), act of May 18. From 1825 to 1843 the bounties were paid out of the state treasury. In the case of roads initiated under the provisions of the general road laws, the successive general acts, in so far as they prescribe the procedure to be followed, are ordinarily uniform. First came a petition to the county commissioners for a new road, signed by a fixed number of inhabitants of the county. Next the county commissioners had to appoint road viewers to report on the feasibility of the new route and to assess the damages it would cause. If the viewers reported favorably, the commissioners adopted the proposal, and directed the road supervisors to construct and to maintain the new road. A proposal for abandonment of an old road took a course precisely similar. In either case, petition, appointment, report of viewers, and minutes of adoption were all recorded in the county commissioners' record or in a special volume for roads.[1]

While the county commissioners' court thus directed the establishment or abandonment of public roads, the care and upkeep were intrusted to district officials annually appointed by the court and responsible to it. To be specific, the act of 1819 directed the county commissioners to appoint supervisors of the public highways in the various townships. An act of 1825 directed the laying off of road districts.[2] It reiterated the provision that the county commissioners appoint road supervisors in each district to report annually to the county court. The act of February 12, 1849, inaugurating township government, transferred to highway commissioners elected in each township in counties adopting that type of organization, the duties pertaining to roads in the township formerly exercised by the county board.[1]

[1] The rudiments of this system were apparent in an act of the Northwest territory of 1792. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, p. 21.) It was somewhat changed by an Indiana act. Revision of 1807, p. 288.

The legislation touching the county control of roads is fairly simple; the really difficult part of the subject is the provision for maintenance.[2] The act of 1819 merely empowered the supervisors to exact as many days labor up to five from each able-bodied resident as was necessary. The act of 1825, which Ford considered the only statesmanlike law on the subject passed in his time,[3] put the assessment of road labor on the same basis as the assessment of other taxes. A road tax was to be levied by the county commissioners and assessed in the ordinary assessment book, and was to be collected by the district supervisors either in money or labor for the support of the roads. The act of 1827[4] swept away this system and like the act of 1819 allowed the supervisors within certain limits to levy as much labor or as little as they chose. A further act in 1831[5] retained the labor provisions, but also allowed the county commissioners to secure additional labor by a tax on real and personal property which might be commuted for money. Where such a tax was levied the road supervisors made out lists of taxable persons in their districts and dispatched them for assessment to the county clerk. The act of February 3, 1835[6]

[1] It reserved, however, to the county board the right to fix the tax rate and a general appellate jurisdiction. See Laws of 1859, p. 195.

[2] For the territorial beginning of the system see the act of December 13, 1799 (Laws of the territory of the United States north-west of the river Ohio, 1799, p. 263) as amended in 1805 (Laws passed at the first session of the general assembly of the Indiana territory, 1805); also the act of 1792 (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, p. 23) and the Indiana law of 1807 (Revision of 1807, pp. 296 et seq.).

allowed the county commissioners to fix both the number of days labor and the rate of tax to be exacted and provided for the levy of the tax like other taxes, while permitting its discharge in labor. To insure the collection of this rate, the supervisor by an act of 1841 was to return the county clerk's list of taxables with notation as to persons who had not paid; the unpaid tax in this case was extended on the collector's book.[1] Further the county commissioners were to enter on their records the number of days that each man should work on the roads, and if they saw fit, to levy a tax in addition; the act further prescribed that the county clerk list on the tax books all persons owing road tax. The tax so listed might be discharged either in money or by labor. After 1849 the road tax lists above described changed their character completely. The new form is prescribed by the act of 1849,[2] requiring the local officials to return to the boards of supervisors or county boards lists of persons liable for road tax, with notation of the instances in which it remains unpaid. When such lists are turned in, it becomes the duty of the supervisors to see that the balance is duly collected.[3] The whole system has been completely revolutionized by the act of 1913.

The records of the county commissioners regarding schools center around the administration of one or two sections in each township set aside by Congress for the support of schools, and around the management of moneys derived from their sale. Thus in 1819 the legislature directed the county commissioners to appoint school trustees in each township to lay out the sixteenth section and make returns of their work to the county commissioners' court.[1] The system began to assume shape with an act passed by the legislature in 1829 in anticipation of the permission of Congress for the sale of school lands.[2] The county commissioners were now to appoint an agent to execute sales of school lands. Such sales were to take place only on petition of the inhabitants of a township for the sale of their school lands. After selling any school lands the agent was to report his sales to the county commissioners' court, noting the description and number of acres of lands sold, the price, the date of sale, the name and residence of the purchaser, and these details were to be recorded by the clerk. The agent was further directed to keep a record of the petitions, including their signatures, on which he acted, a record of his sales as he reported them, and also a record of any loans of school money made by him.

In 1841 the law practically took its present form. The agent was now replaced by a commissioner elected biennially, who has since been replaced by a county superintendent of schools with a four year term.[3] He was to record in four separate books the petitions for the sale of school lands, lists of sales, certificates or records of sales, and accounts of loans made of school money—the last with particulars of interest, person, security, etc. At every term of the county court he was to report to the commissioners his sales, receipts, and loans, the sales being copied in a book by the county clerks.[1] This system of accounting for school funds is in general still followed. The mass of records here sketched, either finds a place in the county commissioners' records, or else in small books which first appear in in many counties in the forties and fifties, in general containing summaries of the books that the commissioner was required to keep.

The above discussion has mainly dealt with the legislation affecting the duties of county commissioners prior to 1848. In the period that has since elapsed the record of course has tended more and more to be simply the record of the county's financial administration. A summary of the legislation regarding it or of the exact contents of the record would be difficult and comparatively useless.

The county commissioners' court record, with its accompanying books and files, is, it may be repeated, a record whose importance for the study of local history cannot be overestimated. Indeed there is danger lest in enumerating certain of the county commissioners' duties we may overlook others. In general it must be remembered that from 1820 to 1840 almost all local government in so far as it is mirrored in records, found its way into the hands of the county commissioners. Few records of the county bear clearer impress of local conditions. For that reason the reader is referred from this necessarily slight survey to the descriptions of the contents of the records of individual counties.

For this very reason, that the county commissioners' record bears the impress of both local conditions and men, it has an interest not only to the general historian of social conditions, but also for the inhabitants of the county in which it originated. To take but a single illustration, in the matter of past and present routes of roads, of the location of ferries, etc., the record affords accurate information on topics around which local discussion loves to linger. If that millenium of the historical worker ever comes, when strong local historical societies crystallize a new interest in the study of history throughout the state, a county society can undertake no fitter task of publication than an edition of the early records of the county commissioners court.

VI. County Clerk—Taxation

Because of the close relation between the various records of taxation kept in county clerks' offices it is easiest to consider them together. To do so, it must be admitted, necessitates in some instances a sacrifice of the method of arrangement generally followed in this report. To give a single illustration, the judgment records are records of the judicial proceedings of the county court and logically belong with its other records. In the foregoing pages where clearness could be gained by discussing taxation records in connection with the court or board responsible for their formation or preservation, as in the case of road tax lists, this has been done. The majority of the tax material in the county clerk's office, however, is easiest understood when grouped under one head.

The historical evolution of the legislation affecting tax records can be grasped most easily after a study of its present stages of development as illustrated by the current Illinois revenue system. In describing that system one logically begins with the method of tax levy. Each of the various state and local taxing bodies certifies yearly to the county clerk the amount it desires to raise. The clerk then proceeds to compute the rate per cent on the taxable property within the jurisdiction of the particular town, city, village, school district, that will produce the specified sum. If in any case the rate exceeds that to which the taxing body in question is legally entitled, the clerk must scale down the levy as may be necessary.

Next comes the process of assessment. In each township personal property is assessed annually and real estate quadrennially in a separate book furnished by the county clerk.[1] Next, the county board of review hears and adjusts any complaints regarding individual assessments, and equalizes assessments between districts. Lastly, the assessments are equalized on the basis of a certificate of the footing of the assessment books supplied by the county clerk to the auditor of public accounts by the state board of equalization. The county clerk then proceeds to extend on the collector's books the sums due from each tax payer to the various state taxing bodies in whose jurisdiction he lives.

Last in order comes the provision for enforcing payment. When taxes on personal property are not paid, it becomes the collector's duty to distrain and sell it; in case he cannot raise the tax in this manner, he reports his inability and files a statement of errors and abatements the facts of which are certified by the county clerk to the various bodies entitled to receive taxes. Thus it becomes an acquittance for taxes that cannot be collected and for sums due on the face of the collector's books because of errors and double listings. When taxes on land remain unpaid and no personal property can be found to be distrained upon, land also is sold for taxes, but with more deliberate procedure. First a list of delinquent tracts of land is published in a county newspaper, and on a given day the collector petitions the county court for entry of judgment against them. In case the owner wishes to contest the tax on the ground of a flaw in the levy or some other technical defect, he may do it at this point by entering an objection to judgment, and securing a hearing on the legal point involved. In default of such objections, the county judge enters judgment against the lands specified. They are then offered at public sale and are struck off to the bidder, who offers to pay the amount of taxes and costs for the lowest per cent of penalty. At any time within two years the owner of the property may redeem it by depositing with the county clerk a fixed sum, equivalent to the amount paid by the tax buyer plus the steadily increasing penalty. If the land is not redeemed within the two years allotted, the tax buyer on recording an affidavit that he has duly advertised his lien on the property, both in the newspapers and by personal notice to the owner, may secure a tax deed.

As has been said, this system has been molded by continual flux and change in the revenue laws. The main outlines sketched above are not all apparent until 1849. After that date it is possible to describe the extant records with reference to the laws prescribing them. For the period of the first constitution, legislation is so confusing and records so few that it is impossible to correlate the one with the other. Accordingly, for this period only the general legislative development will be traced in the light afforded by it; records of the individual counties will be left to explain themselves as best they may.

Since a chronicle of the provisions of the ten or more important revenue acts of the period would be insufferably tedious, the legislation will be grouped topically under the three heads just employed—levy, assessment, and collection. In the early days of the state the business of levy was comparatively simple, for at the end of the period we have set ourselves the present complications had scarcely appeared. The first revenue law of the state of Illinois, that of March 27, 1819,[1] levied a tax on land, on stock of Illinois banks, and on slaves. The law allowed a share of this tax to the county and permitted the county commissioners, if they found it necessary, to levy in addition a tax on personal property not to exceed one-half per cent.[2]

The worst intricacies of the early legislation occur in

[1] Laws of 1819, pp. 313 et seq. The earliest territorial statute on levy affecting Illinois required the court of quarter sessions to estimate county expenses and lay their estimate before governor and legislature to be approved. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, p. 16.) In 1795 an elaborate system was established. It included county expenses and revenues by a meeting in each county of commissioners chosen by quarter sessions, and of town assessors elected in each township. They were further to assess from schedules turned into the constables. (Maxwell's code, 107.) See also the act of December 19, 1799, which prescribed assessment of land on resident taxpayers' lists, and on nonresidents' returns to the auditor or the clerk of the county. Taxes on land went to the state and on personal property to the county, the latter being levied by appointed commissioners. (Laws of the territory of the United States north-west of the river Ohio, 1799, pp. 180, 194.) In 1805 an Indiana statute provided for the appointment by common pleas courts of assessors and collectors to be supplied with transcripts from the land offices by the territorial auditor. On the basis of their rating the territorial auditor was to assess. (Laws passed at the first session of the general assembly of the Indiana territory, 30.) Jones and Johnson's revision of the Indiana laws in 1807 left the common pleas court to audit and apportion taxes and the sheriff to assess and collect on personal property. For land, assessment was made on the basis of an auditor's transcript revised by an assessor appointed by the common pleas court; collection was performed by the sheriff. (Revision of 1807, pp. 370, 517.) Pope's digest (pp. 583, 597) left a commissioner in each county to receive lists of lands on the basis of which the sheriff collected. In Illinois a provision similar to that of the Indiana act was made for personal property taxes except that the county treasurer received lists and the court of common pleas revised them. On taxation, Pope's digest is unspeakably bad.

[2] Laws of 1825, p. 313. The state took all taxes levied on bank stock and nonresident lands and two-thirds of the tax on resident lands. By the act of February 15, 1821, however, it allotted two-thirds of all taxes on land except in the military tract to the counties. (Laws of 1821, p. 183.) Not until 1839 did the state claim a share of taxes on personal property.

matters of assessment and collection.[1] The first mention of assessment books in state legislation occurs in the act of 1825,[2] which directed the auditor of public accounts to furnish each county commissioner's clerk with a tax book of lands lying in his county. This book after being successively used by both assessor and collector was returned to the auditor.[3] As for assessment of personal property, the act of 1825[4] directed a similar procedure with an assessment book, which however originated with the county clerk, and—when corrected by the assessor—finally returned to him. The headings for this assessment book in cases where a personal property tax was levied were specified in an act of 1827—town lots, slaves, indentured servants, carriages, distilleries, stock in trade, horses and cattle,

[1] An act of the Northwest territory passed in 1792 left the duty of assessment to commissioners appointed by the court of common pleas in each county and to assessors similarly appointed in each district. Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, p. 16.

[2] January 17, 1825, Laws of 1825, p. 173.

[3] The act of 1823 directed the auditors to send to the county treasurer a list of lands owned by residents and nonresidents. After correction, this was returned. The act (Laws of 1823, p. 205) further required nonresident lands to be listed with the auditor and sold by him in default of payment. The act of February 19, 1827, amended this act so far as to drop the provision for the return of the corrected tax book to the auditor. The book furnished as the auditor's transcript too assumed more of a permanent character and was added to from time to time as new lands were entered. Here too it might be noted that one puzzling factor in the early tax levy records is the distinction between residents' and nonresidents' lands and property. Thus the act of 1827 required the county clerk to list to the auditor all lands supposed to be owned by nonresidents, taxes on which were collected by the auditor directly. (Laws of 1827, p. 325.) All lands on the "Military Tract" northwest of the Illinois river were so to be listed no matter how they were owned. In lieu of the taxes on them the state for some years paid certain specified sums to the various counties organized in the military tract. In 1829 the revenue law permitted a nonresident to list his lands and pay taxes either through the state auditor or through the county collector. (Laws of 1829, p. 119.) To anticipate a little, the act of 1819 provided that nonresidents pay through the auditor and made the same distinction with respect to collection, by providing that the sheriff list sales of nonresident land or taxes to the state auditor, and sales of residents' land to the county commissioner's clerk. Laws of 1819, pp. 314–317.

watches. In 1839[1] the various district assessors received from the county clerk copies of the auditor's transcript of lands in so far as it covered their districts. After valuing the property themselves or else swearing the owner to his valuations they made an alphabetical assessment list[2] of all persons subject to taxation, whether on lands or personal property. The book was returned to the county clerk to be used by the collector.[3]

Out of the preceding maze of detail, one or two points stand out clearly. Sometimes land and personal property are listed in different assessors' and collectors' books, and sometimes in the same. Latterly one book is used for both assessor and collector. Further, at an early date assessment of real estate is made more accurate by being based, through the auditor's transcripts of land office sales, on the comparatively accurate surveys and sale records of the United States land office.[4]

Lastly comes the legislation on collection.[5] On this

[1] Act of February 26, 1839, Laws of 1839, p. 3.

[2] This provision was repealed February 1, 1840. Laws of 1840, p. 4.

[3] Practically the same provisions appeared in the acts of March 6, 1843 and March 3, 1845 except that the clerk was directed to list separately lands and town lots forfeited to the state. Laws of 1843, p. 231; Laws of 1845, p. 3.

[4] This provision occurs in the territorial act of December 25, 1812. It is interesting to note that the clerks in the Cook county offices have not found the government surveys sufficiently accurate for their purposes. Pope's digest, p. 588. See also the Indiana act of 1805. Laws passed at the first session of the general assembly of the Indiana territory, 31.

[5] The ordinary procedure is clearly sketched in an act of 1798 prescribing that the collector sell unimproved land for taxes on warrant of the quarter sessions, and issue a certificate of purchase. (Laws of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, 1798, p. 23.) An act of 1799 extended its application to all land. The act of 1792 had provided merely for levy on personal property by the collector, or in default, imprisonment of the delinquent. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, p. 16.) An Indiana law of 1806 allowed redemption in two years. (Laws passed at the second session of the first general assembly of the Indiana territory, 1.) In 1821 the auditor assumed complete charge of collecting and selling in the case of nonresidents' land. Act of February 15, 1821, Laws of 1821, p. 182.

head the act of 1819 simply directs the sheriff to make return of his sales of land for taxes to the auditor or to the county commissioners as the case may be, and adds a few provisions regarding redemption within a period of two years. In 1833 an act was passed to clear accounts of all unpaid taxes.[1] By its provisions the auditor is to transmit to the county clerks lists of lands listed with him on which taxes remained unpaid whether "resident" or "non-resident." The county clerks after publishing these lists are, in default of redemption, to sell the lands involved. At the end of two years purchasers of such lands in default of redemptions acquire a perfect title. The clerks' sales of such lands, under the headings of quantity, to whom sold, and price, are to be registered in a special book which apparently will be the first distinct tax sale record.

The fact that such a system can work hardship on the ignorant and can be manipulated by unscrupulous officials soon became apparent. So one would judge from the act of 1839[2] requiring the collector first to advertise his list of delinquent lands and then report it to the circuit court. The court, the act stated, was to enter judgment on this list, and a copy of the judgment was to be the collector's warrant for his sales, which were to be recorded by the county clerk. The constitution of 1848 included a provision forbidding the issue of a tax deed unless the buyer first made affidavit that he had advertised the fact of his lien, either by personal notice on the supposed owner, or by newspaper publication. The constitution of 1870 stated the same position in more general terms.[1] In spite of these necessary precautions, tax sales, as every county official knows, are still a snare to the unwary.

In the case of the later legislation on taxation, it is possible to show the connection between the terms of the acts and the forms of the record. In considering the various types of current record, the forms they take prior to 1848, if they are extant for that period, will also be noted. In the case of assessors' and collectors' books it is interesting to trace the development of the present format, in spite of the fact that the earlier books are so unsufficiently labeled and dated that it is nearly impossible to classify them. The fact that many of the earliest are obviously homemade gives them an especial interest. Often the early tax books are simply sheets of paper folded over and tacked together with ribbon. In Vermilion one ambitious clerk ventured higher. One or two of his books are folios of paper with a backing of soft leather stitched at one end so that the whole record when folded presents the appearance of a leather bound book. In the same county some other small books, barely six inches square, are bound in calico of gaudy patterns, whose colors after the passage of eighty years are still emphatic. Nothing suggests more immediately the economy of stationery and indeed the general simplicity and unpretentiousness of government in the early days of Illinois.

In the forties and fifties the printed-form book comes to supplant homemade devices. Enterprising printing houses begin to get out little books, often not much larger than copy books, with printed forms for the use of assessor and collector. By the middle of the fifties these have been replaced by quartos which can be differentiated into collectors' and assessors' records. When separate volumes for the different townships are adopted prior to 1872 they appear in each instance with the adoption of township organization.[1]

Since the seventies the large folio assessor's book has usually contained the following headings: for land, in whose name entered, the owner's name, the description, the value, the school and road districts in which located, the amount of tax due; for personal property, the amounts under various classifications. In recent years the assessor's book has provided for the assessment of land according to the purposes for which it is used, and for an elaborate series of equalizations.

Collectors' books for the earlier part of the period contain merely the description of the land and the school, county, state, and road taxes due on it. The later forms for real estate detail the owner's name, the description, the number of acres, the value, the value as equalized by county and state boards of equalization,[2] the amounts of state, county, town, school, road, and miscellaneous taxes, back tax due, total, the number of the school and road district, remarks, and when paid. Later forms add further details as to payment in the case of tax sales, and the levy of special assessments. For personal property the same form is followed except that, of course, there is no description of land.

[1] After 1872 the practice was generally adopted. The act of February 12, 1849, provides for the township books in counties under township organization. (Laws of 1849, p. 206.) The act of 1872 made the congressional townships assessors' districts in counties not under township organization. Laws of 1871-72, p. 19.

In each county, beginning at varying dates sometimes as late as the eighties, a collector's book known as the "Railroad Tax Book," which was prescribed by the act of 1872,[1] has been used year by year for the collection of all railroad taxes; other volumes are similarly used for telegraph and telephone company taxes. At this point an explanation of the system of assessing railroad property may be made. The state board of equalization assesses the capital, right of way, and rolling stock of each railroad and apportions each county its share in proportion to the mileage it contains. The county clerk similarly apportions the assessment on which the county is thus entitled to levy for local taxes among the cities, towns, and villages of the county according to the number of miles each contains. Sidings, stations, and tools are assessed to the city, town, etc., where they are located. Each clerk files schedules turned in by the railroads exhibiting the facts of location mentioned above, excepting for tools, and uses them to complete his own assessments.

Next in importance are the records of tax judgments, sales, redemptions, and forfeiture. Since 1880 these have all been kept in one printed-form record—the "Tax Judgment, Sale, Redemption, and Forfeiture Record."[2] It specifies the person to whom the land was assessed, the description, the equalized value, the tax plus interest and costs, the amount of the judgment upon them, and the total amount due on the property sold; the purchaser, the total amount necessary to redeem, the person redeeming, the date of deed, and so forth.

Prior to 1880 these particulars were scattered through several different records. First was the tax judgment record, which in some cases exists in duplicate, one copy being the petition of the collector for judgment and the other the court's order of judgment. Usually this record contains the name of the owner, the description of the land, its value, the itemized and total amount of taxes and costs due, and the name of the tax buyer. The tax sale record gives the description, equalized value, taxes, total due, to whom sold, amount of the redemption, etc. The forfeiture record is a list of lands forfeited to the state for want of bidders. The designations of these records vary from time to time and place to place. Thus, there are tax sale records, tax judgment and sale records, sale and redemption records,[1] etc., each including a part or all of the information noted above; but they vary too much to admit of further classification.

In this connection may appropriately be mentioned the record kept in almost all counties for affidavits for tax deeds. It usually appears about 1850 or 1851 in pursuance of the direction of the constitution of 1848; though needless to say a separate record in many counties does not appear till much later. The record contains the affidavit by the purchaser of a tax title that, having performed the requirements of the law in posting notice, advertising, and giving notice of his lien, he is entitled to a tax deed.[2] The "delinquent lists," as ordinarily filed, are newspapers with certificate of circulation appended, containing advertised lists of persons and property advertised for delinquency in paying taxes. The list usually specifies the owner, the property and its value, and the amount of taxes due. Sometimes, however, these lists also exist in manuscript. Since 1899 every county has kept a record and a complaint docket for the proceedings of the board of review in acting on complaints as to assessments.

The statutes specify two general summaries of taxation to be recorded in each county. One of them, the abstract of the assessment of property, shows the aggregate and the average value of each class of property to be used for equalization. The second, the statement of assessment and taxes, is a transcript from the collector's books. Both statements are forwarded to the auditor, and the records of them appear in county offices in separate books at dates varying from the fifties to the eighties.

Several records are used for levy and assessment of taxes. The books of school[2] and road district plats, although used for other purposes, may be included under this head because of the use made of them in spreading taxes and assessments. No definite date can be assigned for either of these records. The same may be said of the docket of rates and amounts wanted paper. Before receiving a deed the buyer had to make affidavit that he had complied with these requirements. The present statutory provisions in general are the same.

[2] An act of 1855 requires the filing and recording of school plats. (Laws of 1855, p. 60.) An act of 1849 (1 Laws of 1849, p. 164) provides for the recording of certificates of school districts. Another of 1865 (Laws of 1865, p. 118) directed the filing and recording of alterations in their boundaries. A provision for road district plats is in the revision of 1874. Revised statutes, 1874, p. 921.

which is an entry book of the sum demanded by each local taxing body, and of the rate on the assessed property in the district that will raise it.[1]

Finally several files of papers accumulate in the course of the levy of taxes. Among these are railroad schedules in some cases dating from the fifties, and telegraph and telephone schedules dating from perhaps 1878 or 1884. There are certificates of levy filed by various local taxing bodies and dating from the forties. There are school tax lists sometimes as early as the fifties.[2] The files of road tax lists, which give the names of persons in the district liable for tax, the tax unpaid, and the property against which it may be levied, usually are the most complete of all and run back to early dates, sometimes as early as 1838.

On the form of the records and files that have been enumerated the archivist can offer but few specific criticisms. Most of the books are registers with printed headings, and for taxation records this type seems most appropriate. Occasionally a tax assessor's or collector's book contains superfluous leaves, but the defect can be obviated by rebinding. All in all it is hard to see where changes in the form of the tax records could work economy of space.

In the final disposition of taxation records it is easy to trace the distinction previously established between current and dead records. The records of tax judgments, sales, redemptions, and forfeitures, tax deed affidavits, collectors' books of the last twenty years, and perhaps also the certificates of levy are carefully housed. On the contrary, old tax files while usually arranged with some care, are often consigned to basement or attic storerooms. Old collectors' and assessors' books are often piled in corners in basements or staircase corners, and left to suffer from mold and dust in a manner that is nothing less than a disgrace to the state. Often assessors' books have been deliberately destroyed. In short no "dead" record is more frequently or more outrageously abused than dead taxation records.

[1] One miscellaneous record deserves special mention. It is the record for refunding the excessive tax of 1873. (Act of March 26, 1875, Laws of 1875, p. 99.) Another act, March 29, 1872 (Laws of 1871–72, p. 291), directed the county clerk to minute the particulars of each deed before recorded, in order to keep his assessment records up to date. This record, the "Entries of Conveyances," is generally discontinued within a year. The legal requirement was repealed by act of April 31, 1873. Laws of 1873, p. 71.

Here again the question as to whether they should be destroyed or centralized depends on the further question of the historian's interest in them; and it is hard to define exactly the historian's interest in taxation records. Certainly any records prior to 1860 possess historical interest. Especially is this true of assessors' books which may serve as indexes to the wealth of the community and road tax lists which may afford the names of county residents at a desired date. Further it cannot be too often repeated that any record or paper may have historical importance.

For the more recent period, however, it must be admitted that the value of the taxation records, even for such historical purposes, becomes problematical. As the assessments of property bear less and less relation to the wealth actually existing they lose their importance. The only historical value indeed that can be assigned them offhand is value as material for a history of the revenue system; and to centralize such a vast body of material for no greater use than that would be indeed far fetched.[1] The ideal method of treating them would be to digest their contents in statistical form and then destroy such of them as are no longer useful, but such a project is almost as difficult of achievement as centralization. Emphatically the records should not be wantonly destroyed, but the problem of extracting the information they contain at a cost at all commensurate with its value is a riddle that cannot be solved here.

[1]A conservative estimate of the bulk of these records outside of Cook county for the last fifty years would be ten thousand large folios.

VII. County Clerk—Vital Statistics

Under the direction of the board of health, county clerks since 1877 have kept a class of records that may, for convenience, be grouped under the name of vital statistics. These records include registers of births and deaths, records of the license to practice of physicians resident in the county, a register of the names, signature, etc., of practicing physicians and midwives, and a record of marriages, this last supplementing a body of records kept ever since the foundation of the state. A description of these records will best be preceded by a review of the legislation prescribing them.

An act creating the state board of health of May 25, 1877,[1] directed that the board report legislation providing for the registration of vital statistics, and meanwhile prepare forms for the use of the county clerks in recording them. The act further directed the county clerks to procure separate books for recording births, marriages, and deaths in the form that the board of health should direct. Probably with a view to authenticating returns of births and deaths, the act also directed that a register of physicians and accoucheurs be kept.

Subsequent legislation has been framed primarily to secure the performance of their duty by persons required to make returns. Thus in 1901[2] an amending act required town clerks to forward to the county clerk returns of deaths made to them. A second act of 1903[3]

[1] Laws of 1877, p. 208.
[2] Laws of 1901, p. 301.
[3] Laws of 1903, p. 315.

altered the course of the channel by which the certificates reached the county clerk. However, there is still much room for improvement in the proportion of births that are returned. Sometimes from motives that may easily be imagined, and sometimes from pure carelessness, attending physicians fail to report, and thereby render the record statistically incomplete.[1]

In practically all instances birth and death records are kept in folios with a printed form corresponding to the board of health form. A file of the original returns made to the clerk parallels the record. The form of birth returns has apparently been uniform since 1877. It includes information as to the date of the return, the child's name, sex, color, the number of the birth from the mother, the nativity and age of father and mother, the maiden name of the mother, the occupation of the father, the name of the person certifying to the birth. A separate form used for still births, adds information as to the cause of the miscarriage. At times this last record is kept in a separate volume, but at present the tendency is to keep it in a separate part of the regular birth record. In the case of this record, as in the case of deaths and marriages, indexes are kept which are of very uneven value, notwithstanding the fact that they are well nigh as important as any in the office of the county clerk.[2]

[1] The act of 1903 cited above provided that certificates of deaths be forwarded to the clerk through the state board of health. It further directed that reports of births be made to the clerk directly except in the case that a health commissioner in a city of fifty thousand or over directed that reports be made to him. In one county I was told that a health commissioner from no apparent motive had refused to make any return for over a year. In any county it is a frequent occurrence for a parent to discover that the birth of a child has never been reported by the physician. However, in Cook county I was told that since a fee was allowed for returns the improvement had been marked. It might be added here that in a very few counties birth and death returns of a kind were kept as early as 1865. At best these are fragmentary.

[2] The practice of recording the paternity of an illegitimate child may be touched on here. Undoubtedly a return naming the putative father would

The form of death return employed until 1903 included the deceased's sex, color, age, place of birth, length of residence in Illinois, occupation, place and date of death and burial, undertaker, and cause of death. Since 1902-1903 the record has also included conjugal condition, the last and previous occupations, length of residence in the United States, birthplace and name of father and mother, and a more extended record of the cause of death. In most counties the change in form has been responsible for the partial waste of one or two record volumes, but in general it may be said that the printed form records used for birth and death reports are, and have been, economical.

One or two comparatively unimportant certificate records and registers prescribed to the county clerk may be considered briefly at this point. Since 1877 clerks have kept a register of physicians and accoucheurs. It is alphabetical in arrangement, and contains the date of the entry, the signature, address, school of medicine, the particulars of graduation, certificate, and experience of the person in question. Since 1877[1] also there has been a record of physicians' licenses to practice. Usually books are used containing three different forms: for certificates issued to graduates from an approved college of medicine, to persons passing a state examination, and to persons qualified by experience. With 1897[2] a similar record was begun be prima facie evidence of paternity that would have weight in a trial of bastardy; and if recorded might be a libel on the person named. In Cook county the clerk refuses to accept a return stating the paternity of an illegitimate child. A second point of importance is that occasionally a return is made before the Christian name of the child has been decided upon. Unless the clerk is vigilant in forcing the physician to return the name of the child at a future date, the value of the record may thus be seriously impaired.

[1] Laws of 1877, p. 155.

[2] Laws of 1897, p. 84.

in the case of architects' licenses; with 1907,[1] one for nurses' certificates of graduation. Since 1881[2] a similar record of dental licenses has been kept.

While some of these certificate records are not prescribed by the acts relating to the board of health, they all can most conveniently be considered here. The one general criticism might be made against all of them that they are loading up small counties with large books of printed forms, which may at any time be wasted by a change in the form of certificates. The clerks, however, when purchasing forms from a supply house, can hardly be blamed for thinking a large book more economical than a small one. One of two remedies may be effectual: permit the clerks to record such certificates on printed loose leaves and bind them in a loose-leaf record, or else issue to the clerks small books, each containing twenty-five or fifty of a form.

The subject of marriage records has been reserved till the last for more extended consideration, for strangely enough this seemingly simple record has been kept in more diverse ways than any other. In very many counties two different records were kept to recent dates; in many two records are kept at present. This is probably the result of conflicting legislation. Ever since the formation of the state, registration of marriages has been required by legislation that of late years has been supplemented by the acts regarding the board of health and by the rules and forms it has issued. With two independent bodies of legislation on the same subject, conflicts are to be expected.

It will be simplest to begin with the board of health

[1] Laws of 1907, p. 383.

[2] Act of May 30, 1881, Laws of 1881, p. 79.

form, which has remained practically the same since 1877. It retails the number and date of the license, the date of the affidavit; it supplies for both bride and groom, name, residence, age, occupation, names of parents, and the number of previous marriages; lastly it records the place and date of marriage, the witnesses, the person certifying, and the date the return was made on the certificate. In the great majority of counties this record is and has been kept since 1877. In a few it has been discarded of late years, a practice which possibly may come within the law. The terms of the act of 1877 which cover marriages, births, and deaths are not nearly so precise as those of the act of 1903 which relate only to births and deaths. In all such counties, however, some record of marriages is kept.

As has been said, the recording of marriages has been prescribed ever since the beginning of the state. An act of 1819[1] directed the county clerks to keep a record of marriage licenses issued, and to record certificates of solemnization of marriages by justices of the peace and ministers. The act designated the record of the certificate as the evidence of marriage. Licenses were at first unnecessary unless public notice had not been given by publication of the banns or by posting a notice, but for many years past they have been obligatory to a marriage.[2] From the first, however, the law has prescribed that a license to a groom under twenty-one or a bride under eighteen should be issued only in case the parent or guardian of the minor consented.

[1]Act of February 20, 1819, Laws of 1819, pp. 26 et seq. Among territorial acts, one of 1798 prescribed the recording of the returns by the county register (Laws of the territory of the United States north-west of the river Ohio, 1798, p. 30). An Indiana act of 1806 (Laws passed at the second session of the first general assembly of the Indiana territory) prescribed the recording of marriage licenses by the common pleas clerks and returns to them instead of the registers.

[2]Revised statutes, 1845, p. 353.

At different periods and in different counties there has been wide variation in the type of record kept in accordance with the law of 1819. The form ordinarily used at first was a register giving the date of the marriage, the names of the parties, and the name of the person who reported the marriage. Frequently the record also included the number of the license, the date of the license, of the marriage, of the return, and in a few instances the date and name of person recording it.

As had been said, there are several variations from this main type. One of them consists of a register of the parties and the date, together with a record at length of the certificate returned. In a few instances, most of them of early inception, but of long continuance, the certificate only was recorded. More frequently the certificates and licenses were recorded together. As a general rule, however, records of these last named types do not date back so far as the register type, though in Alexander they existed after 1819. The Edwards county certificate record begins in 1815. At any one of three well-defined periods, 1855, 1874, or 1881, any one of these records is likely to have added to it the ages of the parties married. At present, whenever a record other than the board of health form is kept, it is either of the license, certificate, or register type.

In addition to these records, nearly every county has a book record of applications for marriage licenses. Sometimes this record begins in 1878-1881, sometimes in 1892-1894, and sometimes in 1903-1905, for with this, as with many other records, one finds forms adopted at certain well-defined periods, apparently without specific intervention by law. The application record is usually a quarto, having on each page a series of printed questions to be put directly to the applicant for a license, and blank spaces for his answers. The questions are framed to discover anything contravening the law of the state in the circumstances of the marriage—if either party is under marriageable age, and the bride especially; if both parties are of age, and if either has been divorced within the proscribed period, etc. A space is also provided for recording the consent of the parent or guardian in case either party to the marriage is a minor.

Before one passes judgment on this record it must be admitted that it is one of the most human and amusing in the courthouse. Frequently a clerk conscientiously records the answers down to the last syllable of the affiant's embarrassed "yessirs." Occasionally he preserves the answer of a youth so nervous that he has been forced to assume an air of flippancy and answer "you bet I do" when asked if he states positively that his bride is over sixteen years of age. Moreover, in the records are frequently pasted the scrawled and cramped letters in which parents or guardians have given their consent to the marriage of a minor child.

However, in spite of its interest, the record as usually kept must be condemned as extremely wasteful. In the first place a form for parents' consents, although not required in one case out of five or ten, is sometimes included on each page of the record.[1] Further it is universally true that the question and answer arrangement is a needless waste of space. The only thing in its favor is the possibility that a man about to make a perjured affidavit may be deterred by seeing his answer to each point written down as made. Leaving this doubtful advantage, however, a full legal record could certainly be obtained if the applicant were merely required to sign a declaration that could be compressed into half a dozen printed lines. Such a form would use one-fourth of the space required by the present one and for all practical purposes would be as effective. In a few of the largest counties the Cook county system might possibly be applied with even greater economy. Under this system a slip containing on one side the affidavits and on the other the parents' consent, if necessary, is filed along with the returned license. The one objection to this system is the danger of stolen affidavits. In the Chicago office the public is carefully excluded from the part of the marriage record vault containing the files, and an attendant is constantly on watch to see that there is no tampering with the records. The reason for precautions is apparent when it is remembered that the penalty for a false affidavit is fine and imprisonment, and that the loss of the slip containing the affidavit would in all probability severely embarrass the prosecution. For a small county where the public has the free run of the vaults a book record is essential. Where some supervision of the files can be attempted, the other system is preferable on grounds of economy.

One other comment may be made on the subject of marriage license application records. In many counties individual pages have been cut out of certain volumes. While the fact that these mutilations usually occur in the blank parts of the book suggests that pages have been taken as specimens of the form or for some equally innocent purpose, such defacement of a book record is a bad commentary on the local ideals of record keeping. The practice should be discontinued for the future, and where possible, some notation of the reason for the mutilation should be added to the volume itself.

To sum up, therefore, the following marriage records would seem appropriate for the average county. First, a marriage application record in the condensed form indicated above, with "parents' consents" in a separate part of the book or in a separate book; second, for the marriage record proper the board of health form which complies with the statutory requirement that a register of certificates of marriage be kept. The keeping of both a marriage register and a marriage certificate record is a waste of both time and record space and should be discontinued at once.

VIII. County Clerk—Miscellaneous

After all the possibilities of correlation and classification have been exhausted there remain in the county clerk's office a number of records that can be cataloged only as "miscellaneous." Some of them, such as the registers of town and county officers and the record of their bonds are current. Some, while still prescribed by law, such as records of marks and brands and estrays, are no longer kept because as a result of changed conditions the material to record in them is no longer filed. Still others, as the militia rolls of 1861-1862, represent merely some special crisis in the state's history. And lastly there are certain papers, such as election returns, that are merely filed with the clerk.

Most counties keep a register of the commissions of county officers, which specifies the dates of election and qualification and also the date of the resignation or the expiration of term. Sometimes a register of constables and justices of the peace has been kept with the first named record. This second record, when kept separately, has been begun at varying dates from 1831 to 1865.[1] As to records of official bonds, the volumes for constables and justices of the peace date usually from 1877-1881. A record of bonds of assessors and supervisors of assessment has been kept since 1899.[2]

Registers of marks and brands, and records of estrays —stray animals, boats, etc., picked up and recorded with the county clerks—have been kept in every county since its formation. Both records are a survival of the days when much of Illinois was unfenced pasture land, and an unbranded animal might easily stray outside the neighborhood where its ownership would be easily recognized. Today they are almost obsolete. Entries have been very sparse for thirty years back, and generally have ceased almost completely for ten or fifteen. The earliest little volumes of records, some of them not more than six inches square, are strange, homemade affairs. In Vermilion there is an early register of stock marks in which, for a few years, besides the description of the brand was drawn a rude sketch of the head and ears of the animal with the crop indicated on them in red ink. In Mercer county there is one even stranger. Here opposite each entry the full figure of the cow is drawn, with the brand shown on the flank and the crop on the head.

[1] An act of January 10, 1827, prescribed a register of justices of the peace with the dates of their commissions and resignations. (Laws of 1827, p. 200.) Both constables and justices are specified in the Revised statutes, 1845, ch. 59, secs. 14-15, p. 315.

One or two records ordinarily kept about the time of the Civil War need only to be mentioned. About 1865 county clerks generally supplied themselves with form books in which to record licenses permitting the sale within the county of some patented article. Usually there are but two or three entries in each book. Of records more immediately connected with the Civil War every county has a record of the rolls of its militia for the years 1861–1863.[1] Occasionally also there are records of bounties paid to volunteers or accounts of bounty funds.

Among other records covering but a single period of the history of the state may be mentioned swamp land records. An act of Congress of 1850 transferred to the various states formed out of the national domain the swamp and overflowed lands within their borders for the purpose of drainage and reclamation. By act of June 22, 1852[1] the state legislature vested the title to such lands in the counties within which they lay. The auditor was directed by the act to provide each county clerk with a record of the swamp lands in his county. On the lands in this list the county court was to fix a price in proportion to their condition and value as certified by the county surveyor. The drainage commissioner of the county was to sell such a part of them as would provide funds to drain the rest, noting in a book a record of his sales. However in 1859 a second act[2] permitted the sale of swamp lands without limitation. The swamp land records found in county offices usually run from about 1852 to 1860 or 1865 and are two in number: one the surveyor's reports as to the kind and value of the various tracts of land; the other the reports of sales, including amount sold, price paid, and purchaser.

Lastly county clerks' offices usually contain numerous files of miscellaneous papers, besides those already detailed. The great majority of these miscellaneous files are license files. Thus there are files of licenses to hunters and licenses to persons collecting birds' eggs, etc., for scientific purposes;[3] licenses for dogs,[4] which were to be returned by county assessors and listed against their owners in the collector's books. There are also papers relating to bounties of various kinds—bounties on the killing of English sparrows,[1] ground-hogs,[2] and wolves; for strange as it may seem to city dwellers, the prairie wolf is still an unwelcome visitor in the bottoms of the Mississippi and Illinois rivers and in the hilly uplands.[3]

One last file of papers may be mentioned—one which the average county clerk might be disposed to class as less interesting and useful than those named above, but nevertheless one of great interest to the historical student—election returns. At present the accumulations of poll books, tally sheets, and returned ballots that are filed with the county clerk are destroyed within a fixed period after the election. But though in many counties clerks have applied the same principle of destruction to their earlier files of election returns, in many others sets of returns both early and complete survive. Normally the files contain for each election one poll book and one tally sheet from each precinct, and a general abstract of the returns made by the county clerk himself. This last is the only record kept at present. The poll books and tally sheets are invaluable additions to this record for the earlier period as they enable a student not only to trace the vote in each district, but also—since from 1829 to 1849[4] voting was viva voce, and each man's vote was recorded opposite his name—enable him to trace the votes of an individual or a clique over a series of years. Such a record enables the student to gauge the causes of the rise or decline of a party as accurately as does a politician of the present day.

The existence of a record of this type as well as its nonexistence in counties where it has been destroyed to gain space is a strong argument for at least partial centralization of records. Certainly where a record has so little present-day legal value that it is neglected or destroyed by its guardians, and yet possesses such superlative historical value, it should be removed from the custody of county officials who do not care for it to repositories of historical material where it can be properly preserved and conveniently studied.

IX. Clerk of the Probate Court

Probate jurisdiction in Illinois has changed hands so often that for the sake of clearness it may be well to review the long series of courts and persons that have exercised it. In the early days of the Northwest territory a probate judge and clerk in each county performed all probate functions with the occasional concurrence of justices of the common pleas court.[1] An orphans' court composed of the justices of quarter sessions sitting on probate matters was placed above the probate judge in 1795.[2] The orphans' court, however, was displaced by the court of common pleas as established by the act of 1805 in Indiana territory.[3] An act of 1816–1817[4] refers to the clerks of county courts as exercising jurisdiction. Thus in the territorial period of thirty years the probate function three times changed hands.

With the formation of the state, changes went on almost as rapidly. An act of 1819 intrusted probate matters to the county commissioners' courts.[5] Two years later a new act directed the legislature[6] to choose for each county a judge of probate, who should also perform the duties of a probate clerk. After 1839[1] this official gave place to an elective probate justice of the peace who reported his judicial proceedings from time to time to the circuit court. The constitution of 1848[2] and an act of 1849,[3] respectively assigned probate jurisdiction to the county judge, and custody of probate records to the county clerk. The constitution of 1870[4] permitted the legislature to establish a probate judge in all counties having a population in excess of fifty thousand—a figure raised in the act of 1877[5] to one hundred thousand, and again reduced in 1881 to seventy thousand. Today in all counties above this size the probate and county offices are distinct; in smaller ones probate functions are performed by the county clerk and county judge.

A year or two later the judge of probate was given jurisdiction in cases of insanity. (Laws passed in the territory of the United States, north-west of the river Ohio, 1792, 41.) This was repealed in 1795 (Maxwell's code, 180). The same code abolished the clerk of probate. Ibid., 178.

The scope of probate jurisdiction has also varied. Thus in 1823 the appointment and supervision of conservators was vested in the circuit judges,[6] who retained jurisdiction concurrent with the county courts as late as 1869.[7] The power of ordering sales of real estate to pay debts was granted to the county commissioners in 1819,[8] and to the circuit court in 1821[9] to be held by it exclusively until 1849.[10] On the other hand the probate court for a time was invested with original jurisdiction in so alien a matter as the release of insolvent debtors.[1] Only gradually in the twilight of related jurisdictions does the sharp outline of probate functions proper become apparent.

The content of probate records was fixed by legislation at comparatively early dates. To go no further back than the establishment of the state, the act of 1819[2] required clerks to record wills, the proofs thereof, letters testamentary, and letters of administration "with all things concerning the same." The act of 1821[3] transferring jurisdiction to the judge of probate directed him to record his proceedings in a book. Eight years later[4] the laws further specified among his duties the keeping complete records of wills and their probate, letters testamentary, and letters of administration —"either with or without will annexed, de bonis non, or to collect." In addition he must record all bonds of executors or administrators, all inventories, appraisements, sale bills—and further keep an "alphabet of reference" to the page, names of parties and amount of such exhibits, inventories, appraisements, and sale bills. He must also docket all controversies on his records, specifying the names, evidence, and his decision, and record in well-bound books the accounts of executors and administrators. Lastly he must preserve all wills, oaths, bonds, inventories, sale bills, accounts current, and transcripts of settlement—in a word the probate files of papers.

An act of 1831[5] directed him to enter the amounts of inventories, appraisements, sale bills, etc., under a proper heading for "easy reference." Further, the act specified it as his duty to enter in books of record all matters, controversies, and suits that arose for decision or adjudication, together with the judgment or opinion of the court. In 1859[1] a statute, which had most important effects on the form of probate records, required the clerk to keep separate books for the court journal and settlements, for bonds, for inventories and sale bills, and for ledger accounts of estates administered. It also prescribed rudimentary forms for estate and judgment dockets. With the exception of an act of 1865 permitting the use of printed form records, later legislation has influenced the content rather than the form of records.[2]

The relation of these records one to another will be clearer if the general course taken by probate is indicated. In the case of an estate the records begin with the application to the probate court for letters of administration of an intestate estate, or for proof of will in the case of a testate one. In either case there usually is recorded the petition for probate of will and letters, the proof of the will, and of the death of the person whose estate is in question; the oath of the administrator or executor, the bond, the order of the court for the issue of letters, the letters and the appointment of appraisers. Next comes the filing of the inventory of the estate by the executor or administrator and the sworn appraisement by the appraisers; both of these are usually recorded together with the provision set aside for the widow by the appraisers. Originally the widow's award consisted of a list of household necessaries which she might relinquish, selecting other property of like value in exchange. At present it is the family fixtures, the wearing apparel of the widow and the minor children, and a sum of money sufficient for her support for a year, or at her election other personal property in lieu thereof.[1]

The actual settlement of the estate then proceeds. The claims of creditors are filed, arranged in classes for priority of payment according to their nature, docketed, and adjudicated by the court. Where sale of personal property is necessary to administer the estate, the administrator or executor files a bill of sale showing the price received for each article. The administrator or executor annually reports to the court his progress in liquidating the estate and presents a final report at the end of his stewardship. In case it prove necessary to sell real estate to pay the debts of the estate, the administrator must make special application to the court which sets a day for a hearing and cites all persons interested as defendants. The record of the procedure in this case usually includes the petition, the decree of the court, and the report of the sale.

To the archivist the Illinois probate records offer a problem at once difficult and interesting. As can readily be imagined, to devise an orderly system of records for proceedings so diverse is far from easy. Questions of the use of printed forms, of the combination of different types of records in the same volume occur at once and in difficult form. At the same time the evolution by which the usual current system of twenty to thirty different forms has come into being is one that appeals to the imagination. In any county as the chain of records is followed back, records latterly kept in different volumes unite in a single one, printed forms become simpler, pass through experimental stages, and finally give place to manuscript records; these again, it may be, as we approach the days of pioneer Illinois, share small and quaint volumes with records of taxation and county government.

[1] The items prescribed for the widow's award by successive acts are not without interest. Thus the act of February 12, 1823 specified a bed, a horse, bridle and saddle, a spinning wheel and cards, and a milch cow. (Laws of 1823, p. 127.) In 1847 it was fixed at beds and bed clothing for the family, household and kitchen furniture, spinning wheel, loom, pair of cards, stove and pipe, family wearing apparel, a milch cow and calf for each four persons, horse, woman's saddle and bridle, one year's provisions, and two sheep for each member of the family; feed for six months, fuel for three months, and sixty dollars of other property. (Act of February 11, 1847, Laws of 1847, p. 168.) Since 1909 the award has been merely the family pictures, the wearing apparel and jewels of the widow and the minor children, and a sum of money sufficient to maintain the family for a year. Laws of 1909, p. 1.

Examples of the records kept in counties which date from the territorial period may be interesting. The volume in St. Clair county labeled the "record of the orphan's court," dating from 1796 to 1816, sufficed for judicial and county commissioners' records. However, in this instance a separate record for wills was kept after 1794. After 1809 Randolph had a separate probate court record; but a volume containing the county commissioners' record, 1814–1824, was used for probate letters, reports, and settlements. In the case of Madison a single book sufficed for all business till 1818 when a separate one was set apart for wills; but till three years later county and probate records had to share the same book. In Jefferson they did likewise till 1831.

In the period of the first state constitution, probate records, while ordinarily set apart from other records, were kept in a simple fashion. In many counties one book or one series of books sufficed both for documents such as applications for letters, letters, oaths, bonds, wills, sale bills, inventories, appraisements, accounts, and final reports, and also for the decisions of the court on the allowance of claims and for its other formal orders. At least a quarter of the Illinois counties kept their probate records in such simple fashion. Not all the counties kept so much as is here mentioned. Sometimes the single record kept partakes more exclusively of the character of a court journal, and we look in vain for records of papers such as inventories and reports.

When in the thirties and forties the counties began to differentiate their probate records a little it is not always easy to state the principle on which these were divided. Occasionally bonds, letters, wills, etc., were kept in one record, and inventories, appraisements, sale bills, and the adjudication of claims in another. Some counties had a separate record for reports and accounts, such as Stephenson. Others, such as Tazewell, had from the earliest dates a separate will record. Sometimes the logical division was followed, and in one book were recorded papers, and in the other the actions and decrees of the court.[1]

Further differentiations of record before 1849 are not so easily classified. At times a county maintains a separate probate judgment docket or estate docket in which to record the adjudication of claims. Grundy and Livingston among others do this. Others, such as Jackson, differentiate clearly the court record, the claims docket, and the record of wills and bonds. Some, such as Hancock, maintain in addition a will record separate from the papers record. Hamilton separates its inventory, appraisement, and sale bills from all other records after 1840. Peoria does likewise, adding after 1836 a volume for administrators' accounts and reports. McLean follows about the same procedure. Its will record is separate after 1838, its probate docket after 1838, and its inventory appraisement and sale records, and its report records after 1845 and 1847 respectively. Morgan had adopted the same procedure from fifteen to twenty years earlier. Between 1824–1838 it set separate records for its wills, accounts, inventories, bonds and letters, and estate ledgers. Randolph employed separate records for wills and letters in 1826, and for inventories and for bonds in 1829. St. Clair followed a strange system of division by setting off from the probate record, bonds and letters of guardians in 1829, and of administrators in 1831, while maintaining a separate record of wills after 1794. Truly the investigator who seeks to describe the probate record series of the Illinois counties previous to 1849 finds himself reduced to recounting a tangle of individual instances.

Since 1849 the differentiation of probate records has gone on rapidly. Directed by a probate act of 1859 which specified five records to be kept in separate books, it was perhaps guided in some measure by firms of stationers who began to devise books of printed forms for the keeping of probate records—a method given official sanction by an act of 1865. Whatever the cause, however, the uniformity of development exhibited by probate records of various counties, between 1859 and 1870, permits of broad generalizations. In the period specified, the probate journal, though sometimes even now including additional material, becomes a manuscript record of the probate judge's orders and decrees. Sometimes of recent years it has been supplemented by a printed form record of judgments on claims. As a result of the act of 1859, most counties by 1865 had adopted a separate book for administrators', executors', and guardians' records. This record, which in a few counties replaced an earlier printed-form book for probate bonds, includes forms for petitions, for letters of administration, executorship, or guardianship, for the bond and the oath of executorship, administration or guardianship, and in some instances for the formal court order appointing appraisers for the estate. Normally this takes up a two-page form which is usually fairly economical. When first introduced this record contains forms for administrators, conservators, executors, and guardians, or at least for executors and administrators. Since the seventies and eighties the tendency has been to keep the four in separate volumes. However in the case of the smaller county the earlier system might still be economcal if carefully used—if the clerk in ordering the composition of his volume endeavored to determine carefully the relative proportions of the three forms he would be likely to require in a given period. If this were not done, much waste of space would result.

Since 1870 or thereabouts separate records have ordinarily been kept for the appointment, bonds, and letters of conservators, appointed to safeguard the property of persons found to be insane; and since 1893 in many cases a single form has been used to cover both the "insane" and the "conservator" records required by law. Usually this includes the representation to the county court that a certain person is distracted, the county judge's order for a trial of the issue, the trial by a commission of two physicians or by six jurors, the verdict, and the appointment of a conservator.

The insuperable objection to the employment of a record of this type is that the adjudication of a person to be insane is a function of the county judge, but the appointment of a conservator is a probate function. In a few instances a far worse mistake of similar order has been committed—admitting county and probate records to the same volumes. In either case when a county's population necessitates the establishment of a separate probate record office, it may prove impossible to divide the records of the two jurisdictions exactly, for the reason that both have records in the one book.

Will records usually date from about the year 1859; normally they are manuscript, but in a few instances they include a printed form for the proof of the will and a blank space to record its text. Sometimes also they include an additional printed form for the record of the executor of the will. Since use of the forms last mentioned involves wasting space when the text of the will itself is too long or too short for the space assigned it, they are not admissible. If such a combination is desired the better way is to follow the system pursued in the Chicago probate office—stamp the forms for the proof of the will and the appointment of an executor in a blank record with rubber stamps. In this manner it is possible to adjust an economical printed form exactly to the length of the manuscript record, and effect a double saving of space.

Most counties maintain a separate bond record for miscellaneous probate bonds, bonds and letters of administrators appointed "de bonis non" and "de bonis non with will annexed" to supervise the settling of a foreign estate or to replace a deceased administrator. Sometimes these bonds and letters are entered in a manuscript book, and sometimes in separate form books containing three or four different forms.

Inventories, appraisements, and sale bills between 1860 and 1867 were ordinarily kept all together in one series of volumes; but after the date last mentioned the printed-form records came into general use. To them applies the same criticism made on the combination of will records and executors' records—the insuperable difficulty of combining in economical fashion a comparatively short form heading and certificate with a list of varying length. In the case of appraisals there is least trouble because the printed form is there most extensive. But in the case of sale bills there is great waste in the printed form. In certain cases an attempt has been made to obviate it by combining a two- and a four-page form in the same book, but this only emphasizes the fact that the printed form is essentially wasteful. It is worse still when a printer undertakes to combine all three of the records into one form. In one county a combination inventory, appraisement, and sale bill form was found, covering for each entry ten pages. Its preposterousness needs no comment.

The widow's relinquishment and selection, and the records for the sale of real estate present no particular problem. In either case there is a fairly elaborate series of forms, and the entry is usually of a fairly constant type. The report records as ordinarily kept are a simple ledger account and are economical.

Probate fee books are still another type of record in which there is a lamentable waste of space. The ordinary form allots to each estate one page on which are printed a great number of fee items, the great majority never being filled out. In the Cook county office there is excuse for this, as the fee book is identical in volume and page with the estate docket; in such cases the necessity of maintaining a convenient office system must temper any criticism of the method of record keeping.

A mention of probate dockets carries us at once into the worst maze of variable nomenclature to be found among county records. The only terms for which a standard authority may be found are in the act of 1859, which prescribed the keeping of two dockets. One, which the act termed "Judgment Docket," was to have the following headings: name of claimant and estate, nature and amount of claim, memorandum of summons and notice, and judgment of court. So far we are on comparatively simple ground. Under the name of probate judgment docket or claim docket this record is kept in the large majority of instances and has been kept since 1859 or a date even earlier. It is used to record the court's action on claims for sums due from estates in course of adjudication. In very many instances a second docket of related use is kept to record the actions taken before the probate judge. It is termed the judge's docket and in form is similar to the docket similarly named in other courts. These dockets, however, are the most uniform of their class.

Difficulties multiply in the case of the other docket prescribed in 1859. Here the headings are: name of deceased and administrator, date of letters, amount of bond and names of sureties, widow and heirs, when inventory and sale bill were filed, and amount of sale bill. This is the rudimentary form of an estate docket. Frequently this record as now kept includes also a list of claims filed against the estate. If these are debited against sums credited as accruing from the administration of the estate, the book becomes an estate ledger; and this again glides into an account current or report record—a record of the financial reports of administrators, etc. And finally a separate record, entitled "Claims against Estates" may have on the page allotted to each estate a register of the claims filed against it. Here are a half dozen records of similar type but varying form and designation and any three or even any six of them may exist in one county at the same or different times. At such a pass generalization becomes impossible.

The archivist's conclusions on the keeping of probate records will center on the problem of economy of space. Undoubtedly form books have played a most important part in making uniform the probate records of the state, but their use has wasted space in the past to a lamentable degree; in every type of record mentioned above change after change has taken place in the forms used, and in every case a series of books has been left on hand not a fourth, a tenth, a twentieth, a hundredth used. Nevertheless the tendency has been to correlate them more closely to actual conditions. At present in many instances they are now moderately economical devices. Even when this cannot be said of them, it is undoubtedly true that they perform a considerable service in assisting an inexperienced clerk to get the run of his duties. However, clerks should learn their duties in some other way than by the waste of record space, and in the future the correlation of the document to be recorded must become even closer. Where printed forms will not fit closely, they should not be used. The masses of unused printed-form volumes that fill up too many precious spaces in the small vaults of the little counties should be disposed of, and no longer retained in the distant hope that some day a document may be filed that can be fitted to the form. The mistakes of the past should be repaired as far as possible in the case of all old books of forms that have missed their mark by rebinding in some fashion the few pages of writing contained in each, and selling the blank pages for waste paper. Perhaps for the future the solution of economical records lies, at least for the counties where the clerk does the bulk of his own work, in the use of loose-leaf records such as have been installed in De Kalb. Apart from the advantage of binding together all the records pertaining to a given estate, a completed record book of this form would contain no more paper than is actually covered with records.

To the social historian probate records have a high importance. They afford in wills, accounts, and settlements of estates the most reliable information in the existence and distribution of wealth. The various lists, appraisements, and sale bills of items of personal property afford an equally valuable index to the degree of culture and civilization that the community has attained. A bare suggestion of what the probate records may here offer us may be obtained by comparing the contents of widow's awards at various periods. The transition from the spinning wheel and cards and the milch cow and fleeces to the "stove with pipe for the same," and finally to the family pictures, wearing apparel, and jewelry, and a fixed sum of money suggests a good deal of social history. Finally the early probate records of Illinois in their very disorder, confusion, and informality help us to imagine capricious and wayward clerks and probate justices, not as yet conventionalized by fixed forms. Occasionally the feelings of a judge or a clerk may find vent in his record, as for example when a probate judge spreads on his journal an oration he has delivered in open court appealing to principles of American democracy, liberty, and equality, to show why a widow's award should not be proportioned to her contenement. Such a whimsy, doubly naïve for its appearance in a formal court record, brings us very close to the spirit of provincial Illinois.

COUNTY ARCHIVES OF ILLINOIS

COOK COUNTY[1]

The county was established in 1831 from territory attached to Putnam; the county seat is Chicago.

The records of Cook county that have accumulated since the fire of October 9, 1871, are housed in two buildings: the county building which with the Chicago city hall occupies an entire block in the busiest part of downtown Chicago, and the county jail, which contains the records of the criminal court, as well as certain duplicate recorders' records deposited there for safe-keeping. This building is perhaps three-fourths of a mile from the other in a less busy section of the city. Both these buildings are fireproof. The vaults in them, with one exception, are sufficient to the demands made upon them, although the vault in the criminal court clerk's office—a four story affair—is inconvenient. In the county building one whole mezzanine floor—the "three and a half"—is set aside for storage vaults, in addition to the various vaults in the offices. In two or three offices somewhat rusty filingboxes are still in use, but the filing equipment, generally speaking, is modern.

No attempt has been made to criticize the methods of record keeping and filing followed in these offices. The volume of business passing through them has compelled the adoption of orderly and logical systems—and to criticize them effectively, a far more intensive survey than was possible in the time allotted would be necessary. On the surface but a few minor details of unutilized record space that appear to be defects have been noted; and they will not be indicated here. In an especial sense the Cook county records are not merely archives, but are also the tools employed by elaborately organized office forces with multifold public services to perform; and to criticize them fairly one has need to be both archivist and business expert.

[1] Examined March–April, 1914.

In Cook county the volume of business transacted by the county offices has necessarily led to a multiplication of offices and departments. The records of the juvenile court are in the hands of a clerk who is subordinate to the clerk of the circuit court, and beside the circuit court is a superior court with practically identical jurisdiction. Not only are probate records under the charge of an independent clerk, but also the records of the board of assessors and the board of review are in the keeping of the clerks of those offices and all three are equally independent of the county clerk.

Furthermore, the duties still assigned to the county clerk's office are distributed among various departments. Thus the office dealing with birth and death returns and the issue of marriage licenses is on the second floor in the county building with the county clerk's office. Separate departments there have charge of the receipt and the recording of fees, the registering of office correspondence, etc., the receipt of tax redemptions, and the business relating to elections, miscellaneous licenses, etc. On the same floor is the department of tax extension and the county map department. On another floor is the office of the comptroller who acts as deputy of the county clerk, and lastly on still another, the clerk of the county court, who also is a deputy of the county clerk.

The office of the county clerk, devoted to the records of the county court, is on the sixth floor of the court house. A large vault on this floor houses the book records and the more recent files. A large vault on the "three-and-a-half" floor contains the earlier files and a few miscellaneous record books.

COUNTY CLERK

Comptroller

Since 1887 the county clerk of Cook county has been ex officio comptroller. The duties of the comptroller are performed in a separate office by a deputy of the county clerk, who has in his charge all the records of the county clerk pertaining to the county board. This office is on the sixth floor of the courthouse. On this floor is a small vault for current records, and on the "three and a half" floor a larger one where disused records are kept.

The record includes settlements delayed from year to year, with abstracts of inventories and accounts filed.

Record of Capital Stock Assessment, 1911–date, 3 v.

CLERK OF THE PROBATE COURT

The records of this office are for the most part in two vaults, one containing book records, and one containing the files and a few books as well. Both are badly overcrowded. The stacks of filingboxes in the file vault have been piled up to a height of twelve or fifteen feet, and are inconvenient to get at even now. At one time a system was adopted of filing papers unfolded in correspondence files. This system seems to have been economical and much better for the papers than the usual method, and was abandoned only because cases of such drawers could not be piled up to as good advantage as the filingboxes of the ordinary type. The pleas for more room that the office has made deserve a more sympathetic hearing than they have apparently received. The record vault is worse crowded than the file vault; it is difficult to see where two years' further accumulation of books can be put. A few volumes are kept piled up in one corner of a "three and a half" vault. In an office so large as this it is very difficult to obtain exactly the numbers of the current volumes in the various series. The numbers given usually represent volumes in use at some time in the six months following October, 1913.

REGISTRAR AND RECORDER

The recorder's office occupies one side of the ground floor of the county building, Chicago. Four vaults are in use—a small one on the main floor used for torrens records; a larger one used for tract indexes, and other indexes; a large vault downstairs where the record volumes proper are kept open to the public; and a smaller vault fenced off from it where certain abstract records are kept. It will be most convenient to list the records in these vaults separately. In recording documents printed forms are used for releases, trust deeds, tax deeds, statutory mortgages, corporations. Chattels are no longer run in separate volumes. The department chiefs believe it is not feasible to use more printed forms; they point out that a hundred typist recorders are employed, and that each girl has to have two books, one to write in while the other is being compared. In addition extra books must be kept on which the copyists may be employed when their own books are being consulted for documents they contain. Clearly under these circumstances confusion would result from the use of too many printed forms.

MAIN VAULT

MISCELLANEOUS RECORDS

Maps of Cook County, 11 v.

Register of Torrens Registrations, 1899–date, 4 v. (1–4)[2]

[1] Records made in accord with the burnt record act of 1872. (Revised statutes, 1913, ch. 116, pp. 2002 et seq.) This act provided for the restoring of burned county records by the recording of certified copies of deeds, etc., recorded in other counties or courts, federal or state, for the purchase of abstracts made from destroyed records before their destruction, and where none of these availed, for the reëstablishment of title by chancery proceedings in the courts.

[2] Torrens system. Application for registration is made to a court with chancery jurisdiction (in practice this is usually done through the recorder in his rôle of registrar), and is registered in a "Land Registration Docket." The application is next referred to an examiner of title appointed by the registrar and the application itself is advertised. The court may then decree a full or encumbered title to the applicant. The registrar then makes out a certificate of title and records it in a "Register of Titles," one leaf to each Letter Press Copies of abstracts issued, 1895–1911, v. 267–466.

Record of Ante-Fire Abstracts, 5 v.

Owners' Receipts for Torrens Certificates of Title, 1899–1905, 11 v.

Register of Fees, torrens system, 1912–date, v. 4.

"Irregular Indexes" (to documents with no immediate effect on real estate titles, but with the potentiality of affecting them), 8 v., in office.

"Original Entry Book," 1871–date, 387 v. (1–387)

Since 1893 these are bound volumes of the daily sheets on which are typed off notations of the essential parts of instruments filed for record. From these the tract books are made up. A duplicate set is kept in the criminal court building.

Torrens Registration Record, 1899–1911, 3 v. (1–3)

The record is same as above, but for instruments affecting land under the torrens system.

Index to Tax Sales, 1890–1899, 6 v.

These are sectional indexes simply listing lands sold.

Indexes to Subdivisions (arranged by names), 2 v.

Abstract Order Books, 1875–1903, 12 v. (1–12)

A register of orders for abstracts.

Indexes to the above, 4 v.

Abstract Entry Books, 1873–1880, 2 v.

Number of document, date, received from, made and by whom described, and when delivered are the headings.

Letter Press Copies of Abstracts, 1875 et seq. v. 1–266.

Old Minutes of Judgments, etc., 1907 et seq., c. 200 small v.

Pencil Tax Searches, 1910–date, nos. 1–19000, 40 large pasteboard boxes.

Uncalled for Documents.

TORRENS DEPARTMENT

"Record of Certificates of Title Issued," 68 v. (1–68)

Original Entry Book, torrens system, 1899–date, 3 v. (1–3)

certificate, with space for annotations of liens such as judgments, mechanics' liens, etc. A transfer can only be made by the annulment of the old certificate and the entry of a new one. Revised statutes, 1913, ch. 30, sec. 44 ff.

The contents show the grantor, grantee, date of instrument, date of filing, fee, instrument, description of land. Documents affecting torrens system land are numbered in an independent series and not in the general recorders' series.

Tract Index to Torrens Registers of Title, 27 v.

The contents indicate certificate number and date, register book and page, owners' names, description.

Card Index (to name, age, address, conjugal condition, etc., of persons in whose name property is registered).

The information is acknowledged before a notary public and is used as a means of identification. "Cases"—abstracts showing title to property registered under the system—are kept on file, to the number of about 7000. Owing to subdivisions there are about 30,000 pieces of land now registered under it.

ADAMS COUNTY[1]

Adams county was set off from Pike in 1825; the county seat is Quincy. The courthouse is apparently fireproof. While no vaults are used, the records are kept in steel filing cases—the book records on shelves with steel curtains, and the files in steel filingboxes that can be locked. The county has both a circuit clerk and a recorder.

ALEXANDER COUNTY[1]

Alexander county was organized in 1819 from territory attached to Union county; the county seat is Cairo. The courthouse is of brick with wooden interior furnishings and clearly not fireproof. However, it is located in a square and has good vaults eight by thirty feet and ten feet high with steel shutters to the windows. The fittings are of wood and the old type of shelving used so that the books stand on end. Papers are filed in tin boxes set in wooden pigeonholes.

CALHOUN COUNTY[1]

Calhoun county was set off from Pike in 1825; the county seat is Hardin. The public offices are in two old brick buildings and a stone jail, set close to each other but apart from other buildings. The offices of the county and circuit clerks are in a small two-room brick building with cement floor. It is heated by stoves, but seems fairly safe, as there is little in it to burn. A few of the older records are in the jail attic.

CASS COUNTY[1]

Cass county was set off from Morgan in 1837, and assigned an additional strip of Morgan's territory in 1845; the county seat is Virginia. The greater part of the records and files of both county and circuit clerks are in large vaults that apparently are fireproof. A few gaps in the records may possibly be accounted for by the fact that for many years Virginia and Beardstown contended for the honor of county seat. The story, somewhat apocryphal, is told that on one occasion, in 1874, the records were carried away from Beardstown by stealth and a battle waged with pursuers. In the course of it the records are said to have suffered some injury!

CLAY COUNTY[1]

Clay county was made up from territory in Fayette, Crawford, Wayne, and Lawrence in 1824; the county seat is Louisville. Clay county has just completed a new courthouse which is apparently fireproof, with large light vaults, equipped with good filing material. A few of the county clerks' old papers are in tin boxes in the basement. Otherwise, all records are in the vaults, which will be ample to accommodate future increments for many years to come.

COLES COUNTY[1]

Coles county was founded in 1830 from Clark and Edgar; the county seat is Charleston. The courthouse is located in a public square and is reasonably modern. All except current records are kept in fireproof vaults, one for each office. Each vault is two storied, the only admittance to the lower floor being by a narrow stair from the upper. Fittings in the lower vaults are wood, and in the upper vaults steel.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY[1]

Cumberland county was formed in 1843 from Coles; the county seat is Toledo. The housing of the records in Cumberland county is decidedly inadequate for their protection against fire. The vaults of the county and circuit clerks also serve as offices, and are heated by stoves which rest directly on wooden flooring and are near wooden desks and furniture. The courthouse is emphatically not fireproof. It was rebuilt after a fire in 1885, the old brick walls being utilized at least partly. There is a great deal of inflammable woodwork around the vaults and it is doubtful if they could withstand a fire from without better than one from within. The records almost without exception date from 1885. Earlier books and papers were destroyed in the fire.

DE KALB COUNTY[1]

De Kalb county was formed out of Kane in 1837; the county seat is Sycamore. The records in De Kalb county are in excellent condition. The courthouse and vaults are fireproof, the vaults being two-story affairs and well equipped with steel furniture. The records, files, etc. in both offices are well arranged and extremely well cared for. The county clerk has begun a loose-leaf probate record which permits all records relating to each estate to be kept together. For a small county the plan appears good.

FRANKLIN COUNTY[1]

Franklin county was formed in 1818 from territory formerly attached to White, Jackson, and Gallatin; the county seat is Benton. The courthouse, while partly protected against fire by its location in a public square, is not fireproof. The vaults are fireproof and though small are large enough to accommodate the records. The filing equipment, however, is old; the papers are in cardboard filingboxes fitted in wooden pigeonholes, and the books are stored on end in wooden racks. The courthouse of Franklin county was burned in 1843, practically all the records going with it.

FULTON COUNTY[1]

The county was set off from Pike in 1823; the county seat is Lewistown. The courthouse is located in a public square and while not absolutely fireproof is fairly safe. The records are not kept in vaults, but are in steel furniture in the clerks' offices. A part of the circuit clerk's older records are in a basement storeroom, for the most part in cupboards; the records of this office are generally in excellent condition.

GALLATIN COUNTY[1]

Gallatin county was set off from Randolph in 1813; the county seat is Shawneetown. The courthouse at Shawneetown is not located in a square and is not fireproof. The interior work is wood, lath, and plaster, and the building is heated by coal stoves. The vaults are not substantial and have only single steel doors. Moreover, the ceiling of the county clerk's vault is cracked. However, this vault is equipped with steel filing material. The circuit clerk's vault is fitted only with wooden shelving on which the books stand on end, and wooden pigeonholes in which the files are kept. Many of the tax records, etc. are in a storeroom outside the vaults.

HAMILTON COUNTY[1]

The county was formed from White in 1821; the county seat is McLeansboro. Hamilton county in 1911–1912 had no regular courthouse. A brick building in a public square, used for the office of the clerks, was apparently not fireproof. In the offices, books were kept on end and papers were either filed in pasteboard filingboxes in wooden pigeonholes, or else were kept in drawers. The clerks apparently attempted to care for the records as well as such conditions would let them.

HARDIN COUNTY[1]

Hardin was set off from Pope in 1839 and received additional territory from Gallatin in 1847; the county seat is Elizabethtown. The courthouse is not in a public square, but there are no buildings nearby. The courthouse is of brick and wood, and is not fireproof. There are no vaults and the offices are heated with coal stoves and lighted by lamps. In one office the floor is carpeted with matting. The book records are kept on end on wooden shelves and the files are in wooden pigeonholes. The former courthouse with all its records was burned in 1884. As usual, the gossip is that the fire was incendiary.

HENDERSON COUNTY[1]

The county was set off from Warren in 1841; the county seat is Oquawka. The courthouse is not fireproof. The vaults, however, which take the form of two one-story wings built out from it, seem moderately safe. All the records are kept in them. The filing equipment in the county clerk's vault is modern. In the circuit clerk's office, wooden racks are used for the books—which are on end—and pasteboard filingboxes for the papers.

HENRY COUNTY[1]

Henry county was established by act of 1825 in territory belonging to Fulton; but it remained attached to Fulton or Knox till 1837. The county seat is Cambridge. The courthouse is situated in a public square. It is solidly built in general but there are several weak points in it—notably the decorated ceiling recently installed in the courtroom. The great bulk of the records are in the offices in steel filing cases. A few of the circuit clerk's records are in the basement storeroom on wooden shelves. The county clerk has a storeroom in the attic in which a few of the older records are carefully arranged on wooden shelving. Barring the danger from fire, the records in the county are in excellent condition.

IROQUOIS COUNTY[1]

The county was set off from Vermilion in 1833 and organized a year later; the county seat is Watseka. The courthouse is not fireproof, though protected against a fire originating outside by its location in a square. It is made safer also by the use of electric light and steam heat. A basement vault by its dampness threatens the records in it with destruction of a different type. The county clerk's records were destroyed by fire in 1865.

JASPER COUNTY[1]

Jasper county was organized in 1835 from Crawford and Clay; the county seat is Newton. The courthouse is not fireproof, being constructed with wooden floors and lath and plaster walls. The vaults are built with concrete floors and thick stone walls; the steel shutters, however, are hinged on wooden frames. The vaults are too small, being about eight by ten feet and twelve feet high, and are overcrowded. The shelves are of wood, and the books stand on end. The filingboxes are of tin, fitted into wooden pigeonholes five by six inches. The law and criminal files of county court, old supervisors' papers, marriage licenses, birth and death reports, assessors' books, 1860–1909, etc., are in a storeroom upstairs. It is said that at some time or other the top of the courthouse was blown off and some miscellaneous papers lost.

JO DAVIESS COUNTY[1]

Jo Daviess county was set off in 1827 from Putnam, Henry, and Mercer counties; the county seat is Galena. The courthouse was erected in 1839 of brick and stone with wooden floors and lath and plaster interior walls. Needless to say, it is not fireproof. The vaults are of masonry, two feet thick, with double steel doors. The floor is concrete and the ceiling is masonry or concrete laid between railroad irons. Wooden shelves and tin filingboxes are used. In the county clerk's vault, which is badly overcrowded, books stand on end.

JOHNSON COUNTY[1]

Johnson county was set off from Randolph in 1812; the county seat is Vienna. At the time Johnson county was visited the county board was about to spend $10,000 on improvements to the courthouse and record rooms. A detailed account of the crowded conditions encountered would probably, therefore, be incorrect.

KNOX COUNTY[1]

Knox county was organized in 1830 from territory taken from Fulton, and enlarged in 1831 from unorganized territory assigned to Henry. It had been authorized in 1825. The county seat is Galesburg. The courthouse as usual is built in the middle of a public square. The building has tile floors and vaulted ceilings with iron beams; the door facings, etc. are of wood. All in all the courthouse probably is reasonably safe against fire. The records, not being in vaults, are no safer than the courthouse. The books are kept on roller shelves; the files in tin boxes in the circuit clerk's office and steel boxes in the county clerk's.

MASON COUNTY[1]

Mason county was set off from Tazewell and Menard in 1841; the county seat is Havana. The county offices are housed in several brick buildings in a public square. One of these, a one-story building, contains the offices of the circuit and county clerks. The records are kept on roller shelves with cement flooring near them, though a wooden floor and wooden furniture are in the same room. Both offices are in good condition. As ordinarily the county clerk's office presents the most difficult archival problem, it is pleasant to be able to note that it is in excellent order. The clerk is thoroughly acquainted with all the records in his office and has them carefully arranged. The paper files are well indexed. It is said that there was a courthouse fire in 1882.

McLEAN COUNTY[1]

McLean county was set off from Tazewell in 1830; the county seat is Bloomington. The county has a separate recorder's office. The records in McLean county are for the most part kept in the offices of the clerks, the vaults being small. The present courthouse, which is fireproof, replaces one burned in 1900. The most serious losses occurred in the circuit clerk's office, where the files up to 1900 and some of the less important records were destroyed.

MOULTRIE COUNTY[1]

Moultrie county was set off from Shelby and Macon in 1843; the county seat is Sullivan. The present courthouse is located in a public square. It was built in 1906 and is fireproof. The two vaults are especially well designed for safety against fire. Each is built up three stories from the basement. The third story on the second floor of the courthouse is used for current records. The second story, connected with the third by an interior stairway with an iron cover, is used for older records and files. The first story in the basement has no connection with the other two and is reached by a door. In the series belonging to the county clerk, this story is used for old assessors' and collectors' books. The top story in each vault is equipped with modern filing material. The papers in the second story of the county clerk's vault are in pasteboard filingboxes, and the tax records in the third are on wooden shelves.

In both offices the records are in good shape but the county clerk's care for his older records and papers calls for especial comment. The older files are very carefully arranged, bundled, numbered and labeled, and the tax records in the lower vault are carefully arranged in order. The courthouse was burned in 1864. The fire did some damage to the earlier records but did not wipe them out.

PUTNAM COUNTY[1]

Putnam county was organized in 1831 from Jo Daviess and Peoria; a previous county of similar name created in the same region in 1825 was never organized; the county seat is Hennepin. The courthouse is old and not fireproof. The vaults are of brick with iron double doors and cement floors, iron filing material and iron fixtures. The circuit clerk's vault is overcrowded, but practically all the records are in it. The county clerk has a second and smaller vault. In both offices the records are well arranged. The county clerk's miscellaneous files are extensive and well indexed.

[2] In Probate court record, 1832–1845, p. 105, the following item is recorded.

Jarrett Wilkerson, a man of color vs.
John Thaxton, a boy of color and an apprentice to said Jarrett Wilkerson

Whereas Jarrett Wilkerson a man of color, complains on oath that John Thaxton, a boy of color and his apprentice, did without any just cause, on the 15th day of Sept. last, desert from the service of his master, the said Jarrett Wilkerson. It is therefore ordered that a warrant be issued in this case against the body of the said John Thaxton, and cause him to be brought before the court, to shew good cause why he deserted from the service of the said Jarrett Wilkerson, or in default of shewing good cause, that he be dealt with according to law.

These have been carefully mended and mounted and placed in leather-bound portfolios. For a discussion of their nature and contents see American Historical Association, Annual report, 1905, pp. 353 et seq.

RICHLAND COUNTY[1]

Richland county was set off from Clay and Lawrence in 1841; the county seat is Olney. The courthouse is not fireproof, being built with wooden floors and lath and plaster walls. Steam heat and electric light are used. The vaults are small, eight by ten by fifteen, necessitating the keeping of the county court files in the clerk's office, and the tax records in a storeroom. The circuit clerk's records and files are all inside his vault. The vaults are furnished with wooden cases, and papers are kept in cardboard filingboxes.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY[1]

Rock Island county was authorized in 1831 and was organized out of Jo Daviess in 1833; the county seat is Rock Island; the county has all four offices of record. The courthouse is located in a square and is fireproof. The records are in large vaults that are practically fireproof. The only possible point of weakness is a wooden floor, and it is hard maple closely laid on a concrete base. The equipment is modern. Old records and files from all four offices are kept in a room on the first floor equipped with wooden shelves and pasteboard filingboxes. These boxes are indexed in a good index. In the time at disposal it was not possible to do more than estimate the dates and extent of county files. The numbers of boxes given are often filing numbers.

SCHUYLER COUNTY[1]

Schuyler county was organized in 1825 from territory attached to Pike and Fulton; the county seat is Rushville. The courthouse is located at one side of a public square. It is fairly close to other buildings and probably is not fireproof. Each office has a small interior vault that is apparently fireproof. The bulk of the records in each office, however, are in office vaults of questionable safety. A part of the circuit clerk's filing material is wood and pasteboard—otherwise both offices have modern equipment.
